Company Develops System For Sorting Job Applicants

VANCOUVER (CP) — Too many job applicants are hired for the wrong reasons, says Phillip C. Perry, president of Pyscan Psychological Services of Canada, Limited.

Most people are hired in a haphazard manner, he said in a recent interview. They may fill in forms and take some tests, but at some stage a company representative called them in, looked them over and decided that the odds were the applicant would make out.

Starting with a three - day seminar here, with later ones planned for other Canadian cities, Pyscan hopes to train company representatives in a step-by-step method of personnel selection. The system used by Pyscan was developed years ago in the United States by industrial psychologist Robert McMurry. Mr. Perry said Pyscan's seminar is the first such training course held in Western Canada.

The system was explained by John Huberman, vice-president of industrial relations for weldwood of Canada, Limited, which uses the method in processing all job applicants from mill hands to managers.

"Say that you give a person a clerical accuracy test," he said. "If she performs the work in the required time period I can draw the conclusion that she can do this type of work under some pressure, since tests and time limits do involve a degree of anxiety."

DRINKING PROBLEM?

"What I don't know is whether she will leave in three months, devote herself to her work or turn out to be a drinking problem."

Take the case of the attractive salesman, he said.

"Tests will show whether he has sales ability, but they won't tell you whether he will spend his time sipping cocktails."

The selective method seeks to determine how a person will function on the job by identifying basic habit patterns, laid down early in life and that change very slowly, if at all.

Key to the system is the patterned interview designed to reveal the applicant's needs, motivations and character traits, he said. The information collected is carefully analyzed and interpreted.

"The method recognizes that in the final analysis there is no substitute for human judgment," said Mr. Perry.

Interview questions vary slightly, depending on the job position involved. They may range from the state of the applicant's teeth to why he has a second car.

There is no reference to race or religion.

The method is aimed at screening and eliminating applicants at successive stages with a minimum expenditure of time on the part of both the applicant and the personnel staff.

CUT THEM OFF

SELBY, England (CP)—Telephone officials in this Yorkshire town have decided to take action on complaints that young lovers often spend half an hour in public telephone booths talking to their boy or girl friends. Operators will monitor calls and cut them off after six minutes if they discover teen-agers whispering sweet nothings to each other.
