HOLIDAY FOR WIVES

Members of the Canadian Electrical Code Committee and their wives leave Charlottetown today following a series of committee meetings. Enjoying yesterday's sun on the patio of the Charlottetown Hotel were the following:

ELEN'S DIARY

Childhood Sweethearts Wed In Village Kirk

This was an especial day in our district, particularly, we would say, to those in this row which winds out over the hilltop, and beyond toward the village, where at a neat neighbour to the "Old Kirk" there, the bride's home sits.

And to all of us was "The Day of the Wedding."

Let it be a fine day," we, and we are confident, every one of the sisterhood of women - kind in the community through this morning, catch in their first glimpse of the day... Not that either sun or shower, as many as one had proven, has actually any bearing on the success or failure of a marriage. It is the same time, because there is a certain magic in old customs and old sayings, we are bound to remember, and remark at such a time. "Happy is the bride that the sun shines on as at her nuptials. And according to the one girl of this farm, who with others of the bride's schoolmates were among the wedding guests. "A very pretty one too!"

Robson of Vancouver whose husband was chairman of the committee meetings.

D. Martin of Toronto; Mrs. L. Roach, Montreal; Mrs. K. Bellamy of Toronto; and Mrs. L. Bellamy of Toronto, and Mrs. L. Bellamy of Toronto.

And if his fancy ever starts to roam (As men's thoughts will let them wander) Not as four walls, where duty bids him stay, But as a haven at the close of day! Let not the circle of his wedding ring A set of shackles or of bonds, age bring!

As years creep on, and we are growing old, And youth is like a tale that has been told, May he in little sons and daughters see Some likeness of that girl I used to be.

And in the features of each precious face Find what he loved in me of charm or grace! And, last of all, Dear Lord, till this life ends, Let us walk hand in hand, the true friends!"

Good night. — Diary

WOLFVILLE, N.S. (CP) Work with Indians, Eskimos and Whites in Canada's northland is a challenging project that has been growing steadily with the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada, the women learned of their treatment meeting here Thursday.

There are 11 active institute branches in the North. Five of them in the Mackenzie District and one in the Yukon. Five years ago there were none.

The FWIC plans to send a field worker to the North for two months this summer and may give scholarships to Northern Canadians as a Centennial Project.

The information was contained in a report presented by Mrs. G. E. Leba of North Bay, Que. She said "it is anticipated that the field worker will establish, if feasible, workshops for training members in various projects."

It was hoped these would produce recommendations on the type of short course or training that would be of most benefit.

Mrs. James Haggerty of Napanea, Ont., was the first FWIC National president to visit the North. In an interview Thursday, she said Institute work there is adapted to local needs.

A hostess at a tea told her she wouldn't have known how to hold a tea a year before, and she said local school teachers read grade school stories to members, lots of whom could read. This helps them understand what their children are studying. It also encourages them to learn to read for themselves, Mrs. Haggerty said.

Another Northern Institute has a combined beautification and safety campaign for their settlement.
