CUISINE OF CANNIBALS

AUSTRALIAN BUSHMEN SAY WHITE MEN'S FLESH IS "TOO SALTY."

They Prefer Broiled Python, But Are Not at All Averse to Black Meat—They Have Well-Defined Tastes and Cook Their Victims.

"Never have a black fellow behind you" is a proverb in the Australian bush. The bushman's first business in life is to eat, and it matters not whether he eats white or black flesh, serpent, cattle, kangaroo or lizard—only that it is flesh.

Of course the flesh-eater has tastes, the more epicurean the more varied his carnivorous education. He eats the flesh of white men under protest. He prefers the flesh of his own sable compatriots. White man's flesh, he will tell you, laying his hand on his stomach with a suggestive expression of disgust, is "too salty."

The black eats no salt upon his food, and after a time even the white explorer of the Australian bush learns to relish larvae, kangaroo steaks and snakes' kidneys without the addition of salt. In this way he gradually renders himself more palatable to the natives. It is a mistake to suppose that human flesh is the daily diet of these cannibals, for, in truth, they are rarely so lucky as to procure a morsel of their favorite food. The man who stands highest in the estimation of the various tribes is he who is most expert in procuring human flesh. The black fellow rarely kills one of his own small tribe for food, so he has to content himself with eating his enemies or such of his friends as die a natural death.

Snake bite and disease impair the quality of this flesh, and in the tribes where it is eaten it is usually left to the women, who are not considered worthy to eat the superior delicacy of the flesh of murdered men. The natives firmly believe the kidneys to be the seat of life, and they not only aim at this vital spot in fighting, but prefer it to any other part as food, for not only is the flavor to their liking, but in this way they insure all the strength and prowess of their victim passing into their own bodies. The women are, in the main, the providers of food, and the hideous old women learn a witch-like cunning in snaring and bringing to camp game, and even at times the precious "talgoro" (human flesh) itself.

The commoner kinds of food, such as wallaby, kangaroo meat and lizards are cooked by throwing the flesh on live coals. When a crust is formed the natives snatch the meat from the fire and gnaw off the seared surface and then return the raw part to the coals. No matter how large the game or how much there may be of it, it is very unusual for a particle of it to be left for another time. The lean bodies of the naked blacks swell under the strain, but they continue to gorge themselves until the last bone has been gnawed and the last drop of grease has been licked from their hands.

A sort of barbecue method is used in preparing the rarer meat of the cattle, python or "talgoro." A hole is dug in the ground and filled with fire and small stones. When the stones are almost red hot the fire is dug out and the flesh is packed in and covered with fresh leaves and then, with the heated stones, the whole is topped off with a layer of earth, which keeps in the steam and flavor of the slowly roasting meat.

The python's great length, of from ten to twenty feet, makes it an unwieldy creature to roast. The natives coil him down into a ring, as sailors "flemish down" their ropes, and fasten the ring with vegetable fibres. It is then possible to roast it in a large hole in the ground. It is a curious picture to see the natives squatting about the fire, their mouths open with greed, waiting for the buried flesh to be roasted. They seem to know by instinct when it has cooked enough, for all together lean forward and tear open the mound, and bring out the great, coiled serpent.

A black jerks from the snake's head the jawbone, with which he slits open the creature's body. The instant the body is open the whole party scramble for the favorite parts.

The body of the snake is divided into lengths. This they do sitting about on the ground and biting into the body until they succeed in gnawing and rending it into sections. Nothing is rejected. A feast is none the less repulsive when it is of a cannibalistic sort. In that case the kidneys, fat and thighs are considered the choice cuts.

At the death of a relative the black fellow goes into mourning; that is to say, he changes his complete nudity for a string of short yellow straws about the neck and abstains, during the days of mourning, from the daintier dishes of his tribe. This insures sorrow for the dead. He wails horribly for a short time, and an especially loving widow has been known to go the length of turning violent somersaults during the time her husband was engaged in dying. Family affection is not usually, however, so strong, as mothers allow their young children, in some tribes, to be crushed to death and join in eating them with maternal enthusiasm.

Although the bushman can climb the smooth stem of a tree over two hundred feet from the ground, he has no word for tree. He can tear a python from its hiding among the fern wreaths that encircle the gum tree at a dizzy height, but he has no word for snake. He can snatch a handful of earth from the ground at the root of a hollow tree and tell from the smell whether or not the kangaroo is at home, but he has no name for game.

With the eye of a hawk, the scent of a hound, the greed of a boa constrictor, the agility of an ape, he is still man, and loves tobacco. The nursing baby lets go with a snap to fasten upon and suck its mother's pipe, and the passion never leaves him.

A Simple Trick.

Anybody with loose sleeves and cuffs can do the very simplest piece of legerdemain, so easily, that it is a wonder that any one can be deceived by it. A half hour's practice will enable one to do it. I have often taken a half dollar, and holding it in my open palm, would blow upon it. Then putting the palms together, with the hands upright, about on a line with my face, would rub them together and then opening them request two or three of the children to breathe upon it. Then rubbing the hands together would pretend to blow into the opening between the palms, and then opening them slightly the half dollar glides down the interior of the wrist and rests at the elbow. As I did this, I would ask if I saw the half dollar disappearing through the door or window, and the audience would follow with their glances, to see where it had gone. It was really funny to see how surprised the lookers on were, as I acted out the flight of the money. Lowering my arms the money slips down in the hand and can easily be disposed of.

A BLIND PRODIGY.

He Never Could See During His Life, Yet He Leads His Class.

There is a blind man attending the Baptist Theological Seminary who is truly a prodigy, says the Louisville Post. His name is Grant S. Haus, and he belongs to the Hoosier State. He never could see at any time in his life, yet he stands at the head of all his classes, and he is both the wonder of his teachers and his classmates. At a recent examination he received a perfect mark in every branch of study. Any of the students is more than glad to study with the blind wonder, and when a lesson is read to him once he never forgets it. Before preaching he has the hymns and chapters read to him, which he recites in the pulpit just as if he were reading from the Bible or hymn-book. One of his most marvellous feats is to record a lecture, after hearing it, on a typewriter. His teacher regards the young man as one of the brightest scholars he ever had, and, notwithstanding the great handicap, predicts for him a brilliant future. Mr. Haus will be graduated from the school this year.

Not all Quacks.

Because there are quack doctors scouring the country, seeking whom they may swindle, is no reason that your own family physician, of whose skill you have had abundant proofs, is one. This rule can be applied to some remedies with great force, because they are physicians' prescriptions and have been stamped with the approval of thousands of patients as well as physicians. They cannot be considered in the light of "patent medicines, of secret remedies," as the terms are generally understood. Another prejudice among most of our people is, that a liniment is only for external use, and nine times out of ten they are correct. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is unlike any other preparation made and called liniment, and is an exception to the rule. It was a mistake ever calling it anything but Johnson's Anodyne.

It was devised by an old family physician expressly for use in his own privata practice to allay pain, prevent and cure inflammation, both internal and external, which explains why it acts so promptly to relieve and cure colds, coughs bronchitis, fsthma, catarrh, diphtheria, and or all forms of sore throat,—all these diseases being the result of acute internal inflammations. The information around each bottle is worth much to every family. The proprietors I. S. Johnson & Co., will send a pamphlet free to any one, containing much valuable information entitled "Treatment for Diseases."

The most palatable preparation of Cod Liver Oil in the world is Miller's Emulsion, and is now being taken by invalids with astonishing success. Miller's is "the kind that cures" coughs, colds, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles. Every bottle warranted. No oily taste like others. In big bottles, 50c. and $1.00, at druggists.

LOBSTERS PLENTIFUL.—Lobsters are unusually plenty around the Pictou coast this season. In one day this week the fishermen for Hogg's factory at Pictou Island took 40,000 lbs., and at McClure's factory about the same amount. They are caught in such large quantities that factories cannot handle them as fast as they can fish them.

A Prominent Lawyer Says.

"I have eight children, every one in good health, not one of whome but has taken Scott's Emulsion, in which my wife has boundless confidence."

We wish everyone in country and city to call and see our new stock of crockery, which we are selling so cheap at W P Colwill's. dw 4w

Priestley's Dress Goods

A good name is more potent than thrones and kingdoms. In business a good name is vital. The name of Priestley is a synonym for what is delicate, durable and beautiful in Black Dress Goods. In England it is a household word. Priestley's dress fabrics are worn by the well dressed women of Great Britain, while on this side, they have attained to general favor. Ladies should buy no other black dress goods till they have seen Priestley's. They add to an unequalled durability, a beautiful draping quality. Women of taste understand what that means in the success of a costume.
