

IN THE MORNING.

CONCLUDED.

"Tell you what boys," called out the long-legged private, who had before spoken, "thar's fun comin' now! That's Gan's bugle. The 'old regiment' want some of the pie!"

He stooped and felt his saddle girth as he spoke, then straightened himself and waited for the command, for he was "one of the boys." The next moment there was a ringing cheer from the ranks as General Forrest rode up.

"Boys," he exclaimed, pointing with his sword, "I want the battery captured. One regiment has tried, and couldn't take it. Now I want you boys to do better than that. I am going to lead you, and I want you to follow me."

Another cheer was his answer as the men fell into ranks.

"Charge!" and down the slope rode the gallant "old regiment," never faltering as the grapeshot swept through the serried ranks, closing each gap as it was made by the deadly fire; on, on, follow the lead of the tall figure at the head of the dead-dealing guns, "sabring" the gunners there, and the woods gave back the ringing echoes of the famous "rebel yell" as the victory was won.

After the charge Col. Terry found himself face to face with Charley Pictou. "My God, how can I tell him?" muttered the Colonel to himself as the gallant young fellow rode toward him holding out his hand.

"It takes the 'old regiment' to do up things in style!" he said, grasping the Colonel's hand. "Say, Terry, did you see Miss Alice? Coleman has just got back from Memphis, and he told me she had gone on a visit to some friends in—"

But as he spoke he suddenly put his hand to his side. "I am shot!" he gasped, faintly.

It was true. A stray bullet had struck him in the side, and Col. Terry caught him as he reeled in his saddle, and rode with him to the field hospital.

When the surgeon examined his wound he shook his head doubtfully.

"I know a nurse worth twenty doctors," whispered Pictou with a smile. "Terry, can't you fetch her to me?"

Through the night the Colonel stayed with him. Once he wakened and repeated the question he had asked just before he was shot.

"I saw her, yes," the Colonel answered, huskily. "She sent you some flowers."

The blue eyes lighted up with a tender glow, and Pictou held out his hand. Silently Colonel Terry took from his breast-pocket the withered flowers, a spray of ivy, and a half opened white rose, and laid them in the outstretched hand.

Then the wounded man slept. But in a couple of hours he woke, much worse, and the surgeon in his rounds told the bronzed watcher that the end was very near.

"Terry!" and the Colonel bent his head to catch the faint accents, "I'm dying. I wouldn't mind—only—poor Alice. Tell her gently, please—she loves me, you know—and I—oh, Terry! it is hard to leave her. My poor darling!"

For a moment the Colonel could not answer. Then, choking back a sob, he said, slowly and distinctly:

"Charley, Alice is waiting for you. You are not leaving her, but going to her."

A bewildered, troubled look came into the wistful blue eyes.

"Don't you understand me, Charley? She is dead. We buried her in—"

"I couldn't tell you before, dear old boy. But now you will be with her before you have time to grieve after her. She died with your name on her lips, murmuring of meeting you 'in the morning'."

He understood now, and a smile of relief flitted across his pale lips.

"Dear girl," he murmured. "I am so glad she will not have this grief to bear."

Then he slept again, and the hours passed on until the eastern sky brightened with a solemn dawn light.

"Terry!" The word was but the faintest whisper, but the watcher instantly bent his head.

"It is morning," came the faint gasping accents, and again the white lids drooped over the blue eyes. Five—ten minutes passed. Then Colonel Terry lifted the dead hands and crossed them over the pulseless breast, reverently covering the still, white face and turned away.

His two friends had met once more 'in the morning' of a fadeless day.

"TWENTY-FOUR YEARS' EXPERIENCE," says an eminent physician, "convince me that the only cure for 'Nervous Exhaustion' and weakness of the generative organs is to repair the waste by giving Brain and Nerve Foods, and of all the remedies I have used, Mack's Magnetic Medicine is the best. This remedy is now sold by all our Druggists at 50 cents per box, or 6 for $2.50, and on receipt of an order for 12 boxes, accompanied with $5.00, addressed to Mack's Magnetic Medicine Co., Windsor, Ont., they will forward the goods free by mail, and send their 'written guarantee' to refund the money, if the treatment does not effect a cure. See advt. in another column."

PAOLO GIACOMETTI, the Italian dramatist, after a life of unceasing literary activity, died recently in extreme poverty, while Ristori, Rossi and Salvini have reaped glory and wealth from his dramatic creations. Giacometti produced in all about eighty dramas, besides many lyric poems and political discourses. His "Elizabeth, Queen of England" and "Marie Antoinette," have achieved great popularity through the impersonation of Ristori.
