A LOVELY DAY--A LOVELY PARTY

Mrs. H.H. Pierce entertained at a reception Thursday afternoon at her beautiful home, North River Road. Her guests of honor were Miss Jessie Bingham, whose marriage takes place in September to Mr. Malcom Joyce, and Mr. Joyce's mother and sister, Mrs. Thomas Joyce and Miss Vivienne Joyce, who have arrived from Harrow, England, to attend the wedding.

Shown in the picture is a group of the tea assistants. Mrs. W. R. Jenkins is presideing at the teacups. Standing by Mrs. Jenkins in the foreground is Miss Jessie Fullerton, one of the Island's well-known school teachers. Miss Fullerton was the first to meet six year old Malcolm Joyce when he arrived here as a war guest in the home of Dr. and Mrs. H.H. Pierce. Altogether there were 24 guests at this time for Prince Edward Island.

Miss Fullerton at the government's request was in charge of the children and acted as a liason between the government here and the government in England. She had many interesting and amusing stories to tell in connection with the work which made good conversation pieces at Thursday's happy party.

Mabel Matheson, Member Can. College Of Teachers

Miss Mabel Matheson returned recently from Niagara Falls, Ontario, where she attended the first annual meeting of the Canadian College of Teachers. Miss Matheson is an elected member of the college, having been recommended for membership by a member of its council.

This meeting of the Canadian College of Teachers marked the culmination of two years of study and planning by a committee appointed at the annual general meeting of the Canadian Teacher's Federation in August 1956 "to explore the posibility of establishing a professional and scholarly organization to be known as the Canadian College of Teachers.

After careful study the committee submitted a draft constitution which was approved by the annual general meeting in Edmonton, August 1957.

The college, constituted on February 1, 1958, is governed by a nine-member council on which the three major areas of Canada—the Western Provinces, the Central Provinces, and the Atlantic Provinces—are represented. The first president of the college is Professor David Munroe, Director, Institute of Education of McGill University.

The objects of the newly-formed organization are to stimulate professional growth of teachers; to inprove standards of professional service of teachers; and to hold before the teaching profession and the public, the concept of a good teacher.

Proposed means by which these objects may be accomplished include the holding of national, regional or local meetings for the presentatin and discussion of matters related to professional growth and professional service; the exchange of information through publication of pamphlets books and a journal; the establishment and maintencance of libraries; the encouragement of research and writing by members of the profession, the expenditure of funds for purposes of scholarships. bursaries or grants in aid of research.

Membership in the College is granted when the council is satisfied the applicant has a permanent teaching certifcate valid in a province of Canada; holds a degree from a university acceptable to the college or qualifications considered an acceptable alterntive; has at least five years succesful teaching experience in a public or accredited private school after obtaining a permanent certificate, is in active service in teaching or in administration in the field of teaching; where circumstances permit, is a member in good standing in the provincial and national professional organizations, and has made a distinctive contribution to educational, professional and community growth that has brought credit to the teaching profession.

Outstanding features of the two-day meeting of the college were the addresses "A century of Public Education in British Columbia" by Miss Mollie Cottingham, past president B.C.T.F. "The Graduate of the Canadian High School" by Dean H. T. Coutts, Faculty of Education, University of Alberta and Mr. Donald W. Scott, Principal, Stratford collegiate Institute; and "The Foundations of the Canadian Philosophy of Education" by M. l'abbe Arthur Maheun Universite Laval and Professor C.E. Smith, McGill University.

Certificates of Membership were presented to the members of the college present at the annual dinner held in the Sheraton Brock Hotel.

Miss Matheson also attended the thirty-seventh conference of the Canadian Teachers' Federation in conjuntion with which the annual meeting of the Canadian College of Teachers was held.

Plan Wedding Pictures Thus Secure Good Ones

Wedding photographs are once-in-a-liftime pictures to be treasured for as long as you live. No other photographs are quite as significant. Because of this they should be considered as an important part of your pre-wedding planning.

While your friends and relatives will certainly keep busy with their snapshot and movie cameras, it is important that you have a professional photographer to cover the event. This is one time when you can't have too many pictures.

Start the photographic record with a formal portrait made in a professional studio. The trip to the studios is well worth while. There, the photographer has the best camera equipment and lighting arrangements to do a fine portrait. Whether or not he can take pictures in the church and during the ceremony will depend on the customs and preferences of the church. If you don't know, check with the clergyman in advance.

It is a good idea to sit down and write a list of the situations that you know you'll want covered an of the guests whose photographs you'll want to appear in your wedding album. A good friend, who is not in the wedding party, should be "assigned" to accompany the photographer to help round up people for pictures you want and to identify them for the photographer.

Let the photographer in on what "special pictures" you want. For example of yiu are going to toss the bridal bouquet and want a picture of it, tell the photographer when, so he can be prepared to photograph it. If you do it on the spur of the moment, he might be out photographing some of the out-of-town guests.

This holds true for the "slipping away pictues." You can slip away from your guests—but not from the photographer—if you want a picture. As a result of good planning you'll have a picture record of a complete wedding—everything from leaving for the church right down to the last waved good-bye. An extra tip: Don't start the honeymoon without a camera. The photograps you take on that trip will be the beginning of a pictorial record of your married life.

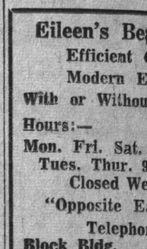
HAZARDS OF HOUSEKEEPING

Some husbands just don't appreciate the things a wife has to cope with at times.



He wants a shirt ironed for an evening out, and even she would agree it's a fairly simple—though tedious — process. Then it happens — she scorches it!

She may not save herself from a lecture from him, but she can save the shirt—probably—by covering the scorch with a paste of starch and water, allowing it to dry, then brushing it off.

Then Junior tramps in with chewing gum on his windbreaker. She rubs it with ice, which won't hurt the fabric and may remove the gum.

Housecleaning may keep her hopping the rest of the afternoon, but if she's smart she'll take time to wash—or at least soak—any oily dustrags. (Throwing them into a cupboard, as is, is an open invitation for a fire by spontaneous combustion.)

Then hubby may march home, cut himself with his razor and mop up on one of her best towels. The answer isn't divorce, it's a thorough soaking in cold water—for the towel, that is, not for hubby.

Then she may rush through dinner, forgetting she still has her lipstick on. Why, or why did she decide to use her best table linen that night! But with lipstick on a linen napkin, she'd better not try cleaning it herself, or she'll wish she hadn't.

Before she goes out that evening, she jots down a memo: "Napkin(s) to Sterns first thing in morning.

She knows we're here to help her in any way we can with problems like this—the sort of problems that crop up during the "normal" day that any housewife may have as often as seven days a week.
