Eccentric South African Tycoon Controls Empire

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — "People merely consider me an interesting eccentric."

But this "interesting eccentric," South Africa's Harry Frederick Oppenheimer heads an empire of some 150 companies which produce diamonds, gold, copper and a sizable portion of Africa's mineral and industrial output Oppenheimer is as many-faceted as the diamonds he mines.

He is a tycoon controlling an economic organization worth at least $3,000,000,000—the Anglo-American corporation of South Africa Ltd.

His headmaster at school in South Africa said in farewell: "I expect you will do better in the world than you have here." He did. Today, Oppenheimer can discuss art, music, poetry or literature in four or five languages—and do the same about horses or rugby. Behind him is a record of honors at Oxford University in England and distinction in service with the British 8th Army in North Africa during the Second World War.

VOICE OF MODERATION

Most of all, Oppenheimer is a white voice of moderation in South Africa, where the aspirations of white and black men seem headed on a collision course.

The political outcome in this crucial country will weigh heavily in the future of the African continent.

With six per cent of Africa's population, South Africa produces about 30 per cent of the continent's industrial goods. Her gold (more than 20 per cent of free world production), diamonds (more than half of world production with marketing control of at least 85 per cent of world production), copper and heavy industry can speed African development by decades—or, if isolated from the remainder of the continent, can commensurately slow it.

The crucial South African issue, internally and internationally, is apartheid — the white ruled South African government's basic policy of separating the country's 3,250,500 whites from the 11,645,000 blacks (called Bantus here); 1,648,000 mixed bloods (coloreds) and 522,000 Asians.

Behind a gleaming hardwood table at Anglo-American headquarters, Oppenheimer discussed the problem and offered his solution in an interview.

"The Africans (blacks) in a material way are better off in South Africa than elsewhere on the continent. But if people are in prison, it doesn't matter how agreeable the prison is."

ECONOMIC GOAL STRESSED

Outside South Africa, many people expect a bloody clash between whites and non-whites here. Few South Africans, whether of Dutch or British ancestry, concur. The primary goal of most black South Africans now appears economic rather than political. Oppenheimer agrees with this view.

"I don't believe that short of external intervention there will be the sort of thing people abroad sometimes suggest. Perhaps there will be a few riots but nothing revolutionary.

However, if you don't give people a chance to struggle legally for what they want, it creates a climate for illegality.

"What matters is the direction you are moving, not how fast you are moving. I have an awful kind of feeling that Premier Hendrik Verwoerd has become a symbol — that if he agreed to a vote for every man (regardless of color) tomorrow, it still would not change feelings. We must avoid the symbolic and look for the signs of change."

OPPOSES APARTHEID

What would Oppenheimer do to bridge this gap between white and non-white in Africa?

"I'd remove the things which themselves have become symbols creating bitterness.

"First, remove the Land Apartheid Act (which seeks to create separate areas for whites, coloreds, Asians and blacks).

"Second, take more black Africans into the civil service.

"Third, have Africans in Parliament.

"Fourth, couple this with a crash educational program."

Oppenheimer feels that education must precede the one-vote for one-man concept. The black South African is fortunate if he has had a few years of grade school, often taught by a teacher who completed little more. But education can provide a long-range South African solution, Oppenheimer is convinced.

He also believes that black Africans must be given more economic opportunities, a field in which he practices what he preaches. Oppenheimer persuaded South African unions to open many job categories to blacks. He feels more must be done.

URGES SKILLED LABOR

Further increases in South African production and a more efficient labor force "will be limited unless we can train the labor force, particularly non-Europeans, far better, and organize industry to make full use of the skills they acquire. In South Africa, 60 per cent of the workers in industry are classed as unskilled as compared with 15 per cent in the United States of America."

Around her borders, South Africa faces grave problems. There is the much publicized boycott by the black African states. To the north, a white minority is struggling to retain control in Southern Rhodesia, which Oppenheimer terms "the Alsace - Lorraine between two systems," a parallel to the rich area contested for so long by France and Germany. Copper-rich Northern Rhodesia, soon to be granted independence by Britain, has close economic ties with South Africa. If Northern Rhodesia, to be called kambia, maintains those ties as a free black country, this could be one of the signs of change Oppenheimer feels essential.

New Titles For Virgin Mary Stir Controversy At Council

By GERALD MILLER

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Proposals to honor the Virgin Mary with new titles stirred controversy at the Vatican Ecumenical Council.

The issue, which has deep implications for Christian unity efforts, revealed wide differences among Roman Catholic leaders on the question of veneration of the mother of Christ.

Some prelates taking part in debate in St. Peter's Basilica urged as strong a new title of honor as possible. Others objected to that, and criticism was even expressed of any new title at all.

For many non-Catholic Christian leaders veneration of Mary is a block to closer ties with the Catholic Church. In the last several years growing concern has been expressed within the Catholic hierarchy itself.

A number of Spanish and Latin American prelates who spoke before the assembly of 2,500 council fathers urged that Mary be given as strong a new title of honor as possible.

They favored such titles as "Mother of the Church," "Mary the Mediatrix," "Mary Protectress and Help of All Mankind," and "Mary The Mother of All Believers." Still other bishops from that part of the world, where Marian devotion is especially widespread, raised objections.

Mexican Bishop Sergio Arceo Mendez spoke out against the title "Mother of the Church." For himself and on behalf of Raul Cardinal Silva Henriques of Chile and 38 other Latin American prelates.

During the day's session, the council fathers cast four ballots on various textual changes in the introductory chapter of the schema on the nature of the church, of which the topic of Mary is a part. The textual changes were not disclosed, but all were approved by majorities of 2,100 or more, council press spokesmen said.

Opening lead — ace of clubs.

When two teams sit down to play for the world championship, anything at all can be expected to happen. And it did — in this astonishing hand from the match between Sweden and the United States in 1953.

It was Deal No. 3 — before the players even had a chance to warm up — in the 256-board match won by an American team comprised of John Crawford, Theodore Lightner, George Rapee, Howard Schenken, Samuel Stayman, and this writer.

With Anulf South and Lillie-hok North, the Swedish pair got to six hearts on the bidding sequence shown. West opened the ace of clubs, wisely shifted to a spade, and Sweden won one.

It was a remarkable deal. The K-Q-J of clubs turned out to be worth less, the diamond void proved to be no asset, and south's excellent diamonds were of little practical use.

When the American pair held the North - South cards, with Schenken South and Stayman North, the bidding went:

South	West	North	East
2♣	Pass	2♦	Pass
3♥	Pass	3♠	Pass
4♦	Pass	5♦	Pass
6♥

The two club bid was an artificial strong bid. A trump was opened. Schenken lost no time drawing West's trumps, cashed the high diamonds, removing all four clubs from dummy, and conceded the ace of spades.

So the United States scored the slam, worth 1,000 points, while Sweden scored 50 points (counting honors), for a net gain to the home team of 1,030 points.

It is a strange ymmentary that two outstanding teams arrived at a slam contract, off two aces. If the same hand had appeared in the average home game it is probably that the players, through the use of Blackwood, would manage to stay out of the slam.

It just makes a fellow wonder sometimes whether the champs are as good as they're cracked up to be.
