Chief Of MacLeod Clan Will Visit This Province

Flora MacLeod of MacLeod, DBE, Dunvegan Castle, Isle of Skye, Scotland, will be touring Canada in January, and is expected in Charlottetown, January 28th.

Dame Flora is the 28th hereditary chief of the Clan MacLeod, the famous Scottish clan whose history dates back to the 12th century. She is 81 years of age, and is midway in a round-the-world tour to visit her clansmen.

While in Charlottetown, she will be the guest of Mr. W. C. MacLeod, president of the Clan MacLeod in P.E.I., and Mrs. MacLeod. Her purpose is to bring to clansmen, and others, stories of the Clan and the ancient castle of Dunvegan, to kindle and inspire interest in the rich traditions of the Clan MacLeod, and to bind more closely the ties between the homeland and distant parts of the Empire.

Ian MacLeod, who would normally have succeeded to the Chieftainship, was killed while serving with the Black Watch Regiment in World War I. Her grandson, John MacLeod, who will succeed her as Chief, is attending McGill University in Montreal. The celebration of John's twenty-first birthday in August, 1956, was the occasion of special celebrations at Dunvegan.

The history of the MacLeods is one of the most interesting and important among all the stories of the Scottish clans. They belong to the small group of clans that claim Norse descent. Their story is full of dramatic reversals of fortune, and is set in the Western Isles. Records in Dunvegan Castle, the "hearth of the clan," tell of the economic struggles that took heavier toll of the Highland clans than all their desperate battles; yet the MacLeods are rich in traditions in which the fairy element is stronger than in those of any other clan. The castle, still the home of the MacLeod chiefs, is filled with pictures and relics.

The British Shops Offer Rare Finds For Visitors

There is no meeting of person and place more congenial than a Canadian unleashed in London, for if the British are a nation of shopkeepers (as they are often called), then Canadians are a nation of shoppers. With this in mind, the British Travel Association of London and 90 Adelaide St. West., Toronto has published a free booklet called "Shopping in London" — a key to all the famous shopping districts and stores of the world's largest city.

The booklet states that "without fear of contradiction, or at least without being perturbed by contradiction, London is the oldest shopping centre in the world." However, it points out that ground rules must be observed. For instance: Don't whistle in Burlington Arcade. Don't suggest that a shopkeeper's "By Appointment to Her Majesty" would look nicer in neon. Burlington Arcade runs off Piccadilly, is six hundred feet long and 187 years old, and is watched over by three beaehles, who are retired hussars in black frock-coats and yellow waistcoats. The beaehles are there because there always have been beaehles in Burlington Arcade, and their function, apart from being traditional, is to see that you do not sing, whistle, run or carry large parcels. They also ring large bells at closing time, which you will regret, because the arcade is one of London's most delightful shopping areas.

The arcade is only a small corner of the lush commercial region containing such world-famous thoroughfares as Bond Street, Savile Row and Regent Street. This is the square mile where the word "quality" got its meaning. The gentleman may buy a hat from James Lock and Co., founded in 1725, who have covered such heads as Nelson's; or select a pair of shoes from the Dolcis shops, nearly a century old. And then he and his wife may go together to order tailored garments from Gieves, who operated from a ship off the Crimea to ensure that the Royal Navy would be well groomed as it battled the Russians in the middle of the last century.

Jewelry delicate china, magnificent silverware — it will be difficult for the tourists to pull themselves away long enough to visit the Tower of London and to see the changing of the guard. And yet, for the knowing, London offers a different sort of shopping. The lover of antiques may, if he wishes, visit dealers in the Bond-Street section. But he may also try the open-air Portobello Road Market. There is no guarantee that he will be able to outwit the shrewd merchants there, but the excitement of the chase should make the prize worthwhile.

It would be an error to assume that London is the only place to shop to Great Britain. You may, for instance, trot out to Eynesford, Kent, to buy your silk from the very Lullingstone Silk Farm which produced the fabric for Queen Elizabeth's coronation gown. Then at Windsor, if you are a true souvenir hunter, you may search for Sonny Springette, who paints the signs for the Castle. Maybe he'd do a keep-off-the-grass notice for you, and you can show your neighbors that the Queen's signwriter was on your payroll. Sonny should be displaying the "By Appointment to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth," the royal warrant which is issued by the sovereign to anyone who has served the ruler for three years.

By custom, the "By Appointment" and the coat of arms are displayed discreetly. Britain would probably go up in spontaneous combustion if anyone displayed his in lights. You also benefit from the Personal Export Plan, which enables you to obtain exemption from purchase tax. If an article amounts to $14 or more, it can be bought free of British purchase tax, but must be shipped directly to the visitor's outgoing plane or ship. Otherwise, it has to be sent directly to your home. The new booklet may be obtained from the British Travel Association.

TEN MILE HOUSE W.I.

The December meeting of the Ten Mile House Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Daniel O'Connell with eight members present.

The meeting opened with the Ode followed by the creed in unison. The roll call was answered by an exchange of Christmas gifts. The minutes of the annual meeting were read and approved.

Correspondence was read and discussed. School committee gave a report and articles were bought for the school. Sick committee reported one call. It was moved and seconded that $5.00 be sent to the T. B. League. Three dollars was given given towards a Christmas treat for the school children. A compass was purchased for the school.

It was voted that a box of "goodies" be given to Mrs. Alex Walsh. Mary Fiske was elected press correspondent for the coming year.

The roll call for the next meeting is to be answered by Sing, Say or Pay. Collection fees at the meeting amounted to sixty-cents.
