

British Views On Trade Proposed

LONDON (CP)—The Financial Times says the problem of increasing British-Canadian trade boils down to finding a device for permitting both countries to discriminate against the United States.

"In the old-fashioned world, that could be done by exchanging new preferences," the newspaper says. "In the world of GATT, it would equally well be done by exchanging preferences and calling them a free trade area." (GATT is the General Trade).

The Economist welcomes the British proposal for an Anglo-Canadian free trade area but says the challenge should be directed as much at British agricultural policy as at Canadian industry policy.

The magazine argues that the only way to save what remains of the Commonwealth preferential market in the older Dominions would be for Britain to reduce her agricultural subsidies in return for progressive removal of tariff barriers to other exports.

CITIZENS getting a close-up of the raging inferno that consumed three barns on Chestnut Street yesterday. This group formed only a small section of the large crowd that gathered to watch the blaze. The great volumes of smoke accompanying the destructive fire, blacked out that section of the city for a considerable time.

TWO OF THE cattle that yesterday morning's fire let loose on the city are shown tied up at a neighbor's fence, following their apprehension in a city-wide round-up. The animals are part of a herd owned by cattle-buyer Maurice Walsh, who lost two barns in the blaze.

Fire Levelled Three Barns In City Yesterday, Animal Lost

Fanned by strong northerly winds, a raging fire yesterday morning levelled three barns on Chestnut Street; two the property of Maurice Walsh, and one owned by Ephraim Malone. Eleven head of cattle were destroyed in the barns of buyer Maurice Walsh at the time of the outbreak, 11.00 a.m.; one on the city are shown tied up at a neighbor's fence, following their apprehension in a city-wide round-up. The animals are part of a herd owned by cattle-buyer Maurice Walsh, who lost two barns in the blaze.

had arrived, but due to their strenuous efforts several nearby residences escaped destruction. The towering clouds of dense smoke that swept southward over the city attracted hundreds of citizens to the scene of the blaze, where many remained until the firemen had brought the fire under control. Mr. Walsh stated that his buildings could not be replaced under $3,000. No estimate of the damage to the Malone property was available at a late hour last night.

Teachers Hold First Workshop

The local teachers met for their first workshop of the year in Murray River School on Tuesday, October 1, Mr. James MacBeth, was named as chairman for the workshops with Mrs. Sylvia MacKay as secretary.

The teachers expressed their desire to attend two workshops at Montague during the year, the first of these in November.

The Murray River teachers agreed to assist in problems in Social Studies which may arise during the year, while the Murray Harbour teachers agreed to assist in Mathematics.

The topic of discussion at the workshop was "The Teaching of Current Events." Some suggestions brought forward by the teachers were: making current events a separate subject; having pupils identify notable personalities from their pictures or quotations; having pupils impersonate certain figures in present day affairs; should current events scrapbooks be class projects or grade projects?

The subject chosen for discussion and demonstration at the next workshops are Art, French, Pronunciation and Physical Education. It was suggested that films in connection with the various subjects be shown at one or several of the workshops.
