MARY HAWORTH

Respect Is One Thing Exploitation Is Another

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: With my wife and parents I am a visitor to Washington, D.C. at this time. I suppose you might call us tourists. We will go on from here to other parts of the country in the course of a month's sightseeing.

All of us wanted to view the house where Mrs. Kennedy has lived in Georgetown. But last evening when we were driving in the Georgetown area and stopped to ask directions of a man on the street, he told us rudely that Mrs. Kennedy had left Washington and moved away "because of hicks like you."

He refused to give us directions so that we could view the house, though we later obtained them.

Our desire to see Mrs. Kennedy's house was because of the respect and admiration we have for her. We don't see how we — who just this week arrived in Washington — could have "driven" her from Washington.

We may be hicks, in the sense that we are people from another state, who are here to see the sights. But we don't want to be a problem to anyone. Do you think that "hicks" like us have driven Mrs. Kennedy away? Please give us your comments. R.G.

Dear R. G.: As the late Will Rogers used to say, all I know is what I read in the newspapers. And from what I've read, the consensus is that the most deplored nuisance and worst example of taste, in the matter of hounding Mrs. Kennedy, was the relentless parade of sightseeing buses which rumbled past her door almost from the day she moved in, to let paying passengers gape at her domicile.

And to give you some idea of how individuals behaved on their own initiative, I was told by a conservative clergy m a n that on one occasion a woman appeared on the scene early in the day, with a folding table and chair and a parcel of food, and literally camped - out across the street from morning until night, in vain hope of catching a glimpse of Mrs. Kennedy or members of her household, entering or leaving.

However, I doubt that Mrs. Kennedy left Washington primarily in retreat from such heroworshipful if tactless intrusiveness.

It seems more probable that she saw the deadline approaching for inaugurating foresighted, long - term precautionary arrangements to secure her children's rights to privacy and safety, insofar as possible, in their daily rounds, after the federal grounds, after the federal government's official guardianship efforts, via the Secret Service, have been terminated.

For this purpose, a move to New York City where she lived in childhood and where she has many ties of friendship, kinship and interests of the mind, and where the vast metropolis offers anonymity to peaceable citizens who truly seek it — such a move seems a logical next step in hopeful pursuit of family privacy.

So I don't agree with the angry Georgetowner who blames the hicks of America. (God bless 'em!) for Mrs. Kennedy's leaving the capitol city at this time.

Likely she could have borne valiantly with grass roots Americans' processional signification of affection, respect and admiration, had not other elements got into the act, to commercially exploit their devotional feeling and ballyhoo her place of residence as a season of carnival side - show. — M.H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Maybe you can tell me how to help my little daughter, age 8. The kids tease her constantly about her mustaches. I've tried to bleach it but it is too dark and heavy; so now it would welcome other suggestions before school starts. She is miserable about the teasing. — V.F.

Dear V.F.: Two of the most reliable producers in these cosmetic trade offer their clients a foam depilatory that removes superfluous hair from face, arms and legs.

Consult your doctor or the head of the facial salon in a first - rate beauty shop, or your local druggist, about the efficacy of such a cream for your daughter. It works for adults; and if it is safe for a child, your problem is solved. —M.H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

A Haze Of Sunshine Lies Over Countryside

"This is going to make another nice day, Ellen, I would say" James said settling a suspender in place on a shoulder this morning, while he surveyed the world about, from our room window. "Yes" he nodded, "another good day for the haying."

How beautifully the day unfolded: a summery day with a smiling blue sky such as we have often hoped for, board g lazy white cloudlets prettily along the broad, high sea. A blue haze, "like smoke" we said, through we knew it was woven of sunshine, lay over the far countryside. An August day it was, though we saw September's asters nodding at their pale blue reflections, as also were the brown - headed cattails admiring theirs today, down by the millstream.

"We must" we said, making haste slowly, nevertheless making haste, against the approach of colder seasons, "pick out any twigs or burrs from that washed black fleece one of these times, so to have it ready to send off to the woolen mill, to have yarn on hand for James' winter - socks." But not this morning, as it happened.

"There's to be no haying before noon" the word came to the farmwives. James came to the door at mid-morning.

"Mack and I are going to the other farm to bring home some grain. I think" he suggested, "you had better come with us, Ellen! Now don't think you must stay at home to make a fine dinner for me! Why, any bit will do. Come!" How exciting the outdoors was, how all is all lovely! Favorite lines came to mind. They will bear repeating:

"Sweet chance that led my steps abroad,
Beyond the town where wild flowers grow -
A rainbow and a cuckoo, Lord-
How rich and great the times are now!
Know all ye sheep,
And kine that keep
On staring that I stand so long
In grass that's wet from heavy rain.
A rainbow and a cuckoo's song
May never come together again!
May never come
This side the tomb."

Well at least perhaps for us never a ride along the fields on so perfect a morning this side the winner! Certainly never would we have this August day again

Up the farm - lane, the little truck nosed its way. Along clovered pastures, across shorn haylands, and on to upland fields. Presently we eased down a gentle decline to a granary there.

Peter tucked beside us, looked up inquiringly when the truck stopped. He breathed a pleased sigh. "Aren't you glad now you came?" he smiled. By this, the Fair will have caught that exciting pulse-beat, which draws folks thither. Young and older will follow their hearts' desire, and in this another year and summer come away through the gates to its delights.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good - night.....

Split-Level Sandwiches

Double-Decker Salami and Cheese Buns are great, hot or cold! Cut onion or Kaiser rolls into three crosswise slices and butter each inside surface. Use thick slices of made-in-Canada Swiss cheese for the bottom layer of filling . . . with several thin slices of salami, and some mustard, for the second level sandwich filling, underneath the top of the bun. Wrap the bun-wiches in foil, if you want a hot sandwich (ready to heat on the barbecue or in a hot oven) . . . or set them out, with glasses of cold milk and crisp raw vegetables to munch . . . for a snack-in-a-jiffy.

Summer Sipper

One cool drink doesn't make a summer—but—tall glasses of this creamy Mocha Shake will certainly make people glad they stopped by at your house on a summer day. Make the refreshers this way—enough for 6 generous servings. Stir 4 cups of cold chocolate milk and a cup of cold strong coffee together until well blended. Add a pint of chocolate ice cream and beat or shake until thick and smooth. Serve immediately.

Sing a Song of Slimming

Here's a salad especially designed for weight-watchers. Just add plenty of chopped cucumber and minced parsley to cottage cheese. Serve on a wedge of melon nestled in a lettuce cup. No dressing needed! Plan to use cottage cheese often in other ways too . . . you'll find it has tremendous "staying power" because it's so high in top quality protein, yet it just nicely satisfies as a luncheon or supper main dish . . . or even for breakfast, with fresh fruits!

Novel Fruit Bowl

Ripe juicy cantaloupes double nicely as serving "bowls" for other fresh fruits and provide a conversation piece into the bargain. Cut the melon in half, lengthwise, sprinkling with lemon or lime juice. Then heap the centre with fresh fruits of your choice and top with scoops of ice cream or cottage cheese. Or crown the fruits with sour cream and a dash of nutmeg, for a gourmet touch.
