MARY HAWORTH

Wife Unreasonably Angry At Husband's Hospitality

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Yesterday I received a phone call from a girl, 23, whose parents are friends of my in-laws. She and another girl had just arrived in town for the week's vacation and sightseeing.

My mother-in-law had told them to call us while in town. As I had been scrubbing kitchen walls and windows all day and was just about to take my daughter to a ballet lesson, I told her we would get together during the week, and my husband would call after they had checked in to their motel.

As the house wasn't in good order, we agreed this wasn't the night to ask them over. Besides there was still homework and piano practice for our two daughters.

Upon calling the girls and finding they didn't know a soul in town, my husband offered to take them sightseeing. Of course I was asked too. But where would I get a sitter; and what about the children's homework, at the last minute?

They were to meet at 8:15, after the girls had eaten; but when Joe arrived they were still dressing. So he took them to dinner, then on a complete sightseeing tour, including some published night club areas. The girl remarked she'd like very much to see a night club floor show, which they did - Joe paying.

Afterward all had breakfast, the girl's treat. Joe got home at 2:30 a.m. and I was furious.

He is self-employed, hard-working, works long hours and we don't have much time to spend alone together. I would not have minded so much if the outing had been limited to a few hours of sightseeing.

My husband says I'm insanely jealous and had no reason to be. I felt he went overboard for the girl and her friend, people we hardly know, and that the proper thing would have been to ask them to the town, not acquire them around town.

I am deeply hurt and feel some type of apology is owed me. Am I right? Or am I insanely jealous? He is 30, I am 26 and we have been married eight years.

DEAR A. R.: As I get the picture from your version of events, you are distressingly inadequate, socially, in the role of helpmate and homemaker, which traditionally requires the good wife to be instant in hospitality, in the good neighbor or good Samaritan spirit.

THIS if apologies are due, in the wake of Joe's night out, I would say you owe apologies to him, on the score of your being so inhospitable (for whatever reasons) to his family's friends, that he had to shoulder the whole burden of "doing the honors", as a result of which he became the butt of your savage unreason to boot, when he got home late.

As to whether you are insanely jealous habitually, I don't know the answer to that, question, as you shed no light on the pattern of your customary attitudes towards women friends

ELLEN'S DIARY

Chimneys Are Cleared As A Fire Safeguard

Did this Monday dawn bright and clear, a pretty morning, the first come in a brand new workaday week? On the contrary it came through a fog of damp. The curtains at the small open window remained motionless, with no smart wind to wait them then. Nor was there any robin's bright trill to greet our awaking, nor dart of swallow's wings beyond, to remind us that the working hours were come.

"Well well!" James offered looking out to the yards. "It's the same weather, Ellen, foggy and mild." Every little twig on the golden willow's branches, now almost within reach of the window, were a crystal drop of damp.

"No sign of sun?" we inquired.

"No, Ellen, no sign of sun. But the day is warm. It's great weather, this for young things to come. We couldn't ask for better. Now this," "wouldn't be another thought, 'wouldn't be a bad day to clean the flues. Yes' he nodded, "we just may get that settled today."

Accordingly, the flues in this and the house across the lane were swept. And as he said "too much", a surprising amount of what could be inflammable material was gathered up from the chere.

"The chimneys are clean" we reported later to Peter. He grinned. His six years, his reasonings, and inquiries as to the workings of the pictured jovial, kindly featured, white-whiskered, gentleman, who comes in by way of these "a Christmas Eve, have given him light on that subject. At the same time, even with the knowledge gained, there is still an air of magic about it.

Odd things that had lifted from roofs here and there about in spells of windy weather, were replaced today in a gesture to winter's coming. This afternoon too, the flue in the old piggery which sits neighboring this house, was dismantled, and the gaping opening left was covered. "It's quite a while since that was built," James recalled, "Yes, a long, long time."

"It allowed or many a great boiler of potatoes to be cooked," we said.

"And many a hog scalded, 'Remember the clean-butchered carcasses hanging in the piggery? A bit later in the season than this it would be, or perhaps toward the spring."

"And the excitement of getting the load of pork off to market by wagon, or sleigh, the next morning!"

"Going to town those times pretty well took up the day. But looking back, that was a nice era of farming. There was work to it, but somehow there seemed to be more awareness of the land."

The farmer's boiler has been missing from its corner in the piggery for years, the flue, sitting atop a gable, alone remaining to remind us of those former days. Now it too is gone. Never again will swifts or other feathered guests find a summer home there to be interesting neighbors of this farmwife as she goes about the chores of her days. The changes come. There is no stopping them. We ride along on the wings of Time. Until tomorrow --- Diary --- Good-night.

IDA BAILEY ALLEN

All Right, Talk Turkey Holidays Almost Here

BY IDA BAILEY ALLEN

Our good friend Eleanor W. Baleman, eastern branch manager of the Poultry and Egg National Board, is well versed in turkey preparation. Chatting with her recently, I made the following notes of what she said:

"In roasting turkey it is more satisfactory first to thaw completely or defrost the bird. The cardinal rule for the care of poultry and other meats is: Refrigerate — Do not thaw at room temperature or use warm water.

On A Tray

"Thaw turkey in the refrigerator in its original wrapping and on a tray. Take 1 to 3 days depending chiefly on size of bird: more than 3 days for birds 24 lb. or over. To thaw more quickly, place the packaged turkey in its original water-tight wrapping under running cold water or immerse in cold water, changing the water frequently. This takes from 6 to 8 hours.

"As to trussing the bird, fasten the neck-skin over on the back with a small shaver. Fasten the vent together with toothpicks. Tie the drumsticks together with string, and a rubber band to the tail. Shape wings skimb-style and bring the wing tips onto the back; fasten in place with small shavers.

"Brush the skin of the trussed bird with fat. Place breast-side up in a low-sided pan in a preheated 325 degrees F. oven. To permit the heat to penetrate into the heavy-meat hip bone area, release trussing when the turkey is two-thirds done. Lay a fat-moistened cloth over the breast and top of the bird, and cover it with a loose 'tent' of aluminum foil to prevent excessive browning.

"Turkey roasting is easy. The turkey requires no water, no searing, no basting, and no covering. With an even temperature of 325 degrees F. roasting time is as follows: 5 to 9 lb., allow 2 1/2 to 3 hr.; 10 to 12 lb., allow 3 to 3 1/2 hr.; 13 to 16 lb., allow 3 1/2 to 4 hr. When bird is done, a meat thermometer will register 185 degrees F.

Traditional Test

"I use the traditional test. Turkey is done when the thickest part of the drumstick feels soft when pinched between protected fingers; and the leg turns easily in the joint. When done, turn off the heat and let the turkey stand 30 min. in a warm oven to 'set the meat' and make carving easy.

Increased Food Pilfering Is Supermarket Headache

NEW YORK (UPI)—Many hands that push supermarket carts come equipped with sticky fingers.

Pilferage and rifling of packages are on the increase in groceries and some store managers say bluntly that customers are less honest today than in the past.

But the housewives answer that probing fingers are primarily to see that they get their money's worth, as they nervily open egg cartons, cookie boxes, meat and other products. Are the eggs all unbroken, for instance? Or is the carton all butter or has some sly somebody else switched out some butter and replaced it with margarine? ANOTHER CHARGE

The supermarkets counter with another charge—price tag switching—when jar or bottle caps are interchangeable, or switching prices on meats. The latter seems the more serious, with 44 per cent of supermarket managers questioned in a poll reporting many shoppers deft at transferring price labels from cheaper cuts of meat to the higher priced ones.

Food industry sources estimate dollars lost annually, either through theft or opened packages no longer saleable, range from $30 million to $3 billion. Some sources say the loss is about one-half of one per cent of food sales (estimated at almost $66 billion in 1965) and others peg it from one to five per cent.

PILOT STUDY

To find just what can be done about pilferage, a Chicago maker of pressure-sensitive adhesive paper and other materials for the graphic arts industry, made a pilot study.

In all, their researchers tallied with 80 supermarket managers in high and low income groups, in both metropolitan and suburban areas of New York and Chicago. They also interviewed 168 consumers in the same areas.

One question of managers—"Is the break-open on a package primarily pilferage or just curiosity to see what's inside?" Sixty-six per cent said pilferage,
