Handicraft Courses To Start Here In The Very Near Future

By MARIAN BRUCE
Guardian-Patriot Staff Writer

Mrs. Percy Lister, the new handicrafts' director for this province has taken over her duties here and is making preparations for handicraft courses expected to start the middle of the month.

Mrs. Lister, who has been associated with the handicraft industry in New Brunswick since its inception there in 1946, said the making of handicrafts should become a thriving industry here, as it has in her native province, within the next few years.

"It can't be expected to happen overnight, but if the tremendous response received so far is any indication of the interest of the people here in handicraft making, it should become a big industry," she stated.

She pointed out that those interested in turning out products as a means of supplementing their incomes, not those interested in handicrafts only as a hobby, were of primary importance to her department.

She said that courses, which include weaving, woodturning, leathercrafts, jewellery, textile painting, and pottery, would be begun first in one of the rural communities. Two full-time staff members, Mrs. Jeanine Albert and Percy Lister, have been engaged to teach textile painting and weaving, and additional instructors will be brought from New Brunswick as the need arises.

The government is providing materials for the course, but the person continuing in handicraft making after the course must buy his own materials. There is a basic fee for the course.

The provincial government will send Mrs. Lister to the National Gift Show in Toronto, where she can display Island-made products and take orders for supplies of the handicrafts.

It was emphasized, however, that the government will not be a marketing agent for the sale of gifts.

"Craftsmen may wish to sell handicrafts, or set up shops of their own," Mrs. Lister said. She plans to stage fairs to display handicraft items, and to organize workshops where craftsmen can get together to discuss problems.

Before goods can be marketed, they must meet quality requirements specified by a handicrafts committee.

Mrs. Lister is herself a weaver, and operated a craft shop in New Brunswick. In 1946, she was instrumental in organizing, through the adult education branch of the Provincial government and home and school groups, craft groups to instruct people in weaving.

She is a member of the Craftsmen's Council and also worked on the standards committee in New Brunswick.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Harvesting Nears End As Autumn Fades Away

"The portable granaries came in handy" our helper offered at supper this evening.

"They did indeed" James nodded. "Saved us extra hands. And if, as in other years, we could have threshed in the field, it's there we would have found just how much help they could be."

"Mean harvest-weather, this time," the helper commented

"And a good harvest" we said.

"A lot of waste to it" James observed.

"Yes, some" the other agreed. "But it might have been worse. There's been a nice lot saved. Granaries aren't empty at all! And there'll be straw gathered in."

Combining ended this morning — and how grateful all were for this! — there came then an influx of men and machines to its scenes on this farm, to bale and haul straw to shelter. And darker and more dense the gathering clouds became, to hurry the work, which yielded them intriguing loads of bales for their toil.

Supper is a matter now for lamplight. By then a cool rain was falling. And we would appreciate how extremely good it was to come from the cool damp to the warmth and coziness within...The main dish of the meal was a scallop — of sorts, a bowl of beef and vegetables and gravy, with mustard pickles for a nice relish.

"This" James remarked "is a dish I'm usually not too keen about. But this time, well there's something tasteful about it. Ellen, would you help me to just a mite more?"...We smiled. A healthy hunger was the condiment that spiced it, won in the afternoon's field.

A scallop, we had. And bread off a loaf of this morning. And to sweeten the meal, a preserve of peaches. And squares of a white cake mixed after a rule of thumb recipe, and topped with a seven-minute frosting, over which for added substance, was sprinkled a dressing of walnuts — which after all, if the cook's fire is in a happy mood, makes a "fair-good" cake.

Now the rain falls in silvery darts athwart the yard-lights. James in the old armchair in the quiet, with an air of deep concentration. What textbook is it? One of the sciences, we suspect.

And while bowing gratefully to scientists for the amazing things they have done to benefit farm-folks in out time, we nevertheless recall how truly, to our mind, the recent Bank of Canada's monthly letter, which treats of "Culture for Everybody", points out — among other interesting thoughts·

"Science is not the be-all and end-all of life. You may know all about the sun, and all about the atmosphere, and all about the rotation of the earth, and yet miss the radiance of the sunset."

"Culture has to do with the less material aspects of life, like intellectual proficiency, and the love of beautiful things."

Such as, we think, are to be found now over the farmlands: folks at the harvest-work, last tints on the trees, children, kitcats at play in the fallen leaves on the lawn, ewes following a path up a green slope, cows by the stream...and with raindrops glistening, as so many jewels on the windows, a man, and a woman, and a maid, in an old kitchen, where the hearth-fire actually crackles, and the lamplight glows!

Until tomorrow — — Diary— Good-night.....
