Fish and Game Association of P. E. Island.

To the Editor of the Examiner.
Sir,—The Prince Edward Island Fish and Game Protection Association have issued placards embodying the most important sections of the Dominion Fishery Act of 1868 and the Local Game Law of 1879. Five hundred of these are sent all over this Province, and are, or will be, posted in every conspicuous place, so that "he who runs may read"; and no excuse can be offered by anyone violating the laws "through ignorance."
The inhabitants of this Island are, for the most part, the descendants of respectable English, Irish, Scotch and French parents, and now, when they know the law, we feel sure they will not break it wilfully.

Some excuse might be offered for the poor Miemac or half-breed spearing or netting trout or salmon, or shooting a stray partridge during the close season, because their necessities might require it, but none can be made for those born with so many better advantages breaking the law and thriving, gipsy-like, by poaching. It is for the interest of all now to protect and preserve our fish and game, for, at the rate that our rivers have been netted, and the game shot in the breeding seasons heretofore, both fish and game would very soon be regarded as things of the past, and classed amongst the extinct species.

By a little self denial now, our rivers and bays will again abound with trout and salmon, and the woods, marshes, coverts, etc., be frequented by partridges, ducks, woodcock, snipe, &c., and afford ample profits and recreation for all, both in town and country.

It has been ignorantly said that these Game Laws, &c., are intended only for the benefit of "Law sports" this statement is manifestly unjust and absurd; for this reason: In this country everybody can afford a gun and rods; and they have them. There are no such things as "Licences to Kill Game," nor do we want them in our free country; they are relics of the feudal ages and may stay in the countries whence they originated. Town and country, rich and poor, can equally enjoy a day's fishing and fowling. A good many poulterers make considerable profit out of wild fowl, and trout in season always bring a ready market; but, if they are killed out of season, in their breeding time, and whole rivers at one fell sweep emptied of their trout, how long it may be asked, in common sense, would the fish and game last! Everybody knows the story of the old woman with the hen of golden egg fame, and its sequel. Well, they can apply it to this case, and draw their own inference.

We feel sure that every one will vie with each other in doing all they can to protect and preserve the fish and game, and that our Province will not long remain behind the rest of the Dominion in its moral character in this respect.

Yours, &c.,
S. D. FITZGERALD,
Sec'y Fish and Game Society.

A Sermon to Young Women.

Dr. Oswald Dykes preached in Regent Square Church, on a recent Sunday evening, in connection with a special mission to the women of London which is being held throughout the metropolis during the present week. The congregation was principally composed of young women, a large number of whom had evidently travelled long distances through the heavy rain. Dr. Dykes chose for his text Proverbs xxxi. 30. "Favor is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised." At the feet of women as of men, said Dr. Dykes, two paths lie open. The name of the one is wisdom, which has for its beginning the fear of the Lord, while the name of the other is vanity which cultivates a showy and transient attractiveness, that it may allure a passing homage, or while away a vacant hour. Vanity leads to loose behaviour, a frequenting of doubtful company, a coquetting with sin, and the usual committal of sin. The difficulty of finding suitable places of amusement, a deficiency of education, and the long hours of monotonous labor, these are hurrying crowds of young women into frivolity if not into dissipation. But more than anything else, there is the force of example to contend with. Hardly any woman cares to be unfashionable, and thus a young girl is betrayed almost against her will into dressing with undue display, and wasting her time in the silliest of talk. Influences precisely similar operate in the drawing-room. Their accomplishments are cultivated not for their own sake, but solely because fashion prescribes and society expects them. This also is vanity. Whatever we do merely to be talked of, is vanity. The thirst for excitement is by no means confined to the classes that toil for their living, but with them it is the most excusable. The short-lived praise which vanity begets turns to cold neglect. It beggars a woman's nature, dwarfs her soul, and, if it does nothing else, it wastes in folly that which was meant for God. Let her once become the slave of such folly, and she is contemptible. Dr. Dykes then proceeded to point out a more excellent way—a way of piety, which is heaven's wisdom. Those who lived for present enjoyment, and sought to be admired for external appearances, would be un deceived one day. It is not all sunshine for the butterfly, he said. But how often does such wisdom come too late! The worn-out heart of deceived and disappointed woman turns not seldom to other sources than the fear of God. She only chooses wisely who bestows the affection of her heart where love is supremely due, and who prefers eternal happiness to transient pleasures. In manhood piety sits with peculiar grace. The first lesson of Christ's school is humility, the second trust, and the third purity of heart. How closely might woman approach to the ideal of her Lord if she tried. It is in the serene atmosphere of home and in a woman's heart that we can more confidently look for the beauty of holiness on earth. But the beauty is inward. The path of heavenly wisdom is Jesus Christ. There is no other path that will conduct to eternal life. Nothing less noble than a religious life is worthy of womanhood—nothing but a religious life can avert a miserable disappointment. It is only the fear of the Lord that can secure for woman an abiding and eternal honor.

The 101st Regiment of H. M. troops celebrated the anniversary of the battle of Plassey, at Halifax, on the 24th, with an unusually attractive programme. The square at Wellington barracks, where the 102nd Regiment is quartered, was ablaze with bunting and hurdles and other appliances necessary to the carrying out of the programme. The band of the regiment was in attendance. All the officers of the regiment were present and evinced deep interest in the success of the sports. The audience included His Excellency Admiral Peyron, of the French squadron, and all the officers under his command; His Excellency Sir Edward Ingfield and lady, and all the naval staff; the officers and large battalions of all the other regiments at present stationed here, the American Consul and other prominent and official personages.

A private letter received in Halifax states that it is almost certain that Vice-Admiral Sir Francis McClintock will succeed Admiral Ingfield on this station, and that his flagship will be the "Northampton."
