TORONTO (CP) — Two young urses were dead, another badly urt. The driver of the car police y killed them was fighting for e in hospital Tuesday, a police let in his head.

ad in suburban East York, ene of the double fatality Mony night, there were demands for investigation as to whether the ullet should have been fired.

Two East York councillors said ey will ask for a full inquiry to the chain of events which rted when police constables estman of East York picked up trail of a car reported stolen ller in the evening in Toronto.

TIRED TWICE

When the car did not stop after 50-mile-an-hour chase, Priestan fired two shots, police said. e said later the first was a warnshot, the second aimed at the eing car's tires.

Instead, it hit the driver. The car swerved off the road, struck three nurses waiting at a bus stop, and ended up on a lawn after bouncing off a house.

Columba Colangelo, 19, of Toronto, and Josephine Shynal, 19, St. Catharines, were killed. Eileen Keating, 19, of St. Catharines, was taken to hospital where her condition was described as serious.

STRUCK IN NECK

The driver, whom police identified as 18-year-old Robert Smythson of Uxbridge, Ont., was in critical condition in hospital Tuesday night. The bullet hit him in the back of the neck and lodged behind his eye.

Police said he was charged with car theft.

Among the attacks and defenders of Const. Priestman's action were these:

East York Councillor Treadway: "Police could have stopped the car with a road block instead of firing . . . if they couldn't fire properly—with reasonable accuracy — they shouldn't have fired at all."

"TRIGGER-HAPPY COPS"

Mrs. Anthony Colangelo, mother of one of the dead girls: "Those trigger-happy" cops! If it hadn't been for them my daughter would still be alive."

Insp. James Warren of East York police: "It's a terrible thing, but at the speed Ainsworth and Priestman were going it was impossible to aim. He was shooting at the tires."

Const. Priestman said he felt it was his duty to stop the car before it could endanger other lives.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Writing Lincoln's Gettysburg Address on a single strand of human hair two and one-fourth inches long is but one of the wonderful feats of Jim Azharee, the North Dakota farm boy who became the world's champion miniature writer.

Injured in an automobile accident in 1926, Jim first learned of small writing contests in the hospital. Tiny writing was then a fad sweeping America. The farm boy entered contests which awarded prizes for writing the largest number of letters in a defined small space.

To the boy's surprise he won several contests. He kept plugging. During the dry years when most farmers in his part of the world had tough going, young Jim won numerous prizes, including five new cars, by doing small writing.

In 1935 Robert Ripley declared Jim to be the world's champion miniature writer after the boy had written 9,007 letters on a single grain of rice. A few years later Jim broke this record when he wrote the entire Declaration of Independence — plus the names of its 56 signers together with the names of the 13 original colonies —on one side of a rice grain.

That made up a total of 7,567 legible letters of such minute size they could be read only with a microscope. It took him 8 months to complete the job. Another amazing feat performed by the boy was reading a newspaper eight feet from his eyes.

Jim can write a 20,000 letter composition on the back of a postage stamp. He once wrote 101 verses of the "Rubaiyat" by Omar Khayyam, in a book that was one-eighth of an inch square, and one thirty-second of an inch thick. It was at the Dallas (T) Centennial Exposition in 1936 that he wrote the Gettysburg Address on a hair!

At expositions and fairs the boy writes the names of individuals on a grain of rice. This is a simple job for him. Among famous persons who have had their names put on a grain of rice are Jack Dempsey, Jean Hersholt, Bing Crosby, and the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Jim requires absolute quiet when he is working. Vibrations of walking on a floor can damage his writing.

Poison Ivy Vaccine Found

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - The University of Pennsylvania has announced that tests on a new vaccine for the prevention of poison ivy have proven successful. Thousands of students and other volunteers submitted to a series of injections intended to desensitize them to the weed.

Dr. Donald M. Pillsbury, professor of dermatology at the university's medical school, said that in every case the new vaccine "reduced the individual's sensitivity to the plant and many persons became completely immune."

The new vaccine is administered intramuscularly. About six injections were given each volunteer.

Dr. Pillsbury said that "we don't know how long this desensitizing will last."

Tests Held At Holland Cove

The boys at Holland Cove Y.M.C.A. Camp enjoyed a varied and interesting waterfront program under the direction of Darrold Tanton.

Several well trained groups of swimmers were presented for examination.

Juniors: Gordon Full, Allan MacDougall, Richard Campbell, Barry Wilson, Bob Henry, Keith Hicken, Bill Dorion.
