The Birthday Murder

By Lange Lewis
CHAPTER FOUR
Part One

As Victoria turned back into her empty house she realized that the next day was her thirty-fifth birthday. Perhaps the vivid youth of Moira Hastings had brought the thought to the surface of her mind. She realized that this was the first birthday in many years for which she had not planned a party involving the two dozen most intimate of her friends. As an only child, her birthdays had been made much of, the rapture over unwrapping many mysterious packages was something she had never outgrown. But this year for some reason she had planned no party. She had been busy on a story, of course, but then that was nothing new. There had been Albert, and his gnawing anxiety as to whether or not he would do "Ina Hart," but that was after all his problem, and outside a natural concern had not deeply troubled her. Perhaps, she thought, perhaps I'm just growing old.

The thought was a melancholy one. Graying hair, a need to watch her diet to avoid unbecomingly full hips, a deepening of laugh lines around her eyes — These had not bothered Victoria. She had always felt young, always felt as though most of her life lay ahead of her. But this year she had made nothing of her birthday, had almost forgotten it.

She had no way of knowing that her thirty-fifth was to be the most memorable of all the birthdays of her life.

Saxe was her oldest friend. They had known each other since they had been children of 12, and although their lives had taken very different patterns, they had remained friends down the years. Bernice was a tall, pretty woman with a little-girl voice that contrasted oddly with her size. She spent a great deal of her time and money on her clothes, which were always of the best. Her large face was beginning to show a tendency to sag around the jaw line, she used a pink net strap at night. She had very beautiful small feet and her shoes cost as much as many women spend on an entire outfit. Today she was wearing a handsome gray pin-striped suit which displayed her fine figure to advantage. Over it was tossed a silver fox scarf, a Christmas gift from her husband, Walter. She was wearing no hat, and this was odd, for Bernice loved hats almost as much as shoes. Her shining chestnut hair, worn sleek and smart against her head, was very slightly disarrayed, and this too was unusual. But the oddest thing of all was the fact that Bernice was clutching a green lizard bag, although her shoes and gloves were black suede, and there was no touch of green elsewhere about her costume. She stood in the doorway with her shining brown eyes opened very wide, and Victoria had the feeling that at any moment she might topple over and crash to the tiled floor of the porch.

Victoria reached out and took Bernice's hand. Even though the black suede glove Bernice's hand seemed stiff and cold. Her fingers did not close on Victoria's but remained in position. It was like holding the hand of a mannequin in a store window.

FAMOUS FLIGHT

The minute she saw Bernice Saxe standing there in the doorway she knew something was wrong, terribly wrong. Bernice

Twin engines of the plane that Alcock and Brown flew over the Atlantic in 1919 had a total of only 720 horsepower.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear Husband, Frank H. Dixon, who passed away October 18th, 1948.

Three years have passed, my heart is sore,
As time goes on I miss you more,
I little knew when I awoke,
The sorrow that the day would bring.

The blow was hard, the shock severe,
To part with one I loved so dear,
Your faint last wish I would like to have heard,
And breathed in your ear one last parting word.

Only those who have lost alone can tell,
The heartache of parting without farewell.

Fondly Remembered by His Loving Wife Albina.
