Leaders must be consulted, and meetings called, Mr. Crockett noted, while stressing the need for group decision.

"Do not tell them what to do, let the group decide what is to be done," he said.

"You are the leaders of the Womens' Institutes of Prince Edward Island, the strongest organization in the Province... and can do great things for the health of all our people. Your Health Department just waits for you to ask.

"When you are dealing with education and health you are dealing with those things that are most fundamental, not only for the health of the local community but also for the morale of a nation and even for freedom and justice and peace in the world," the health official stated.
