INNER GREATNESS

God made man to be great. The fact that from all eternity God planned that man share in all the benefits of Christ, His Divine Son, is ample proof of this. We are, as St. Paul says, co-heirs with Christ. Having been blessed with this inheritance, it is natural for man to thirst after greatness. But he who defeats himself when he satisfies this thirst in a mistaken manner.

The world today affords us a striking picture of the faulty ways in which man has sought this greatness. Wealth, power, pleasure and high positions are considered necessary for the attainment of this goal. Though they may contain some element of satisfaction in themselves, man uses wealth and power and all the rest as means to fulfil an even greater desire—that of being "somebody." People shrink from the fate of a "body."

Man's attempt to claim his inherited greatness, without knowing in what this consisted, has caused a disruption of the order in the world. Observe the sudden rise of dictators, the spirit of unbridled competition in every field of endeavor, politics, business, athletics—these are but a few ways in which man has hoped to assert that greatness which is his due. Indeed, that man might be a "somebody"—even in the insignificant activity—is the man's solution to the problem. But is this the true solution? Christ, the Son of Man, through His example, has clearly given us the answer.

There is a great tendency today to measure a person's worth in terms of quantity, instead of quality. The student's intelligence is measured by the number of facts memorized; the athlete's fame rests upon a mathematical average of games won or lost; the writer's genius upon the number of books published; the success of a father upon the amount of money earned, or the type of position held. Yet, in none of these ways, need the real greatness of the individual be made manifest.

Man triumphs over evil, perseverance in the face of great odds, continual courage in the midst of fear, hope in times of stress, enduring love throughout conflict—all these real and lasting claims to greatness cannot be measured in terms of quantity. These few examples suggest the quality of inner greatness to which all men can attain. But it takes a man, dependent upon the help of God, to reach these heights of true glory.

In the face of Christ's example, men were forced to conclude that they had sought greatness in only apparent goods. Happiness, which should follow upon this greatness, could not always be found in wealth, power and possessions. To seek these was to seek disorder and degradation. Man had to learn that God was the only necessary condition for his greatness. By attaining to Him, their desires were fulfilled.

An independence of created things and a dependence on the Uncreated was the only answer. In view of this, the presence or absence of worldly goods are unimportant. What counted was how man would bear himself in the face of them, and to what account he turned them. The source of greatness lies within man—in his soul. By perfecting the soul we increase our greatness and deserve our reward as co-heirs with Christ. The world needs great men today. Our country is dedicated to the task of establishing peace within and without its borders. As our nation develops, as our cities grow, Canada calls upon her great men in this noble endeavor to extend order and harmony among people in a troubled world. And it is in men—grounded in the faith and love of God—that her call will be heard. These have found their greatness in Him; they, alone, can give of their abundance.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

There are left-handed lobsters the same as there are left-handed people. Every lobster is equipped with one crusher claw and one digger claw. Earl Moore fisherman of New Haven, P. E. I., captured a lobster last year with the crusher claw on the right and the digger on the left, reversing the law of nature.

Killing two birds with one stone compared with trapping a two-headed mouse with only one piece of cheese. That's what William Elza of Tulsa, Okla. did recently.

The greatest of all bird travelers is the Arctic tern. It flies from the Arctic to the Antarctic, covering more than 20,000 miles on the trip.

Jeeping their way through 69 countries in 14 months, two Canadian brothers, Warren D. Wilkins, 24, and Douglas, 22, of Toronto recently arrived in Japan.

So far the Jeep journey has cost the brothers just about $2,000. They hope to work their way back to Canada aboard a ship.

When President Harry S. Truman left office on Jan. 20th last, he stood in line with former President Herbert Hoover as the nation's only two surviving former chief executives. In contrast, there are a living Americans who served as Vice Presidents of their country.

I know one woman who refuses to listen to gossip. Here is what she has to say on this subject. "I never willingly listen to anything derogatory about a fellow being. But I am always ready to listen to something good he or she has done."

If there were more of us like this woman our reputations would be safer.

Benjamin Disraeli was laughed to scorn one time but said he: "The time will come when you will listen to what I have to say." And strange but true this man became the powerful and respected Prime Minister during the reign of Queen Victoria.

Louise M. Alcott was told by a famous editor that he could see no hope of her ever becoming a novelist and Thomas Edison was advised by a teacher that he was too dumb to learn anything! To mention their names is enough.

Perhaps the greatest speech ever made by Calvin Coolidge may be summed up in one paragraph. Here it is:

"You never want to let trouble bother you. If you see 10 troubles coming down the road, don't get scared. Before they get to you nine of them will go into the ditch and the other one will be so weak by the time it reaches you that you can handle it."

Grafting is a common method of dwarfing plants. For example, the pear is dwarfed by grafting on quince, the apple by working on the parasite apple stock, a less vigorous type of apple.

Some varieties of plums are budded on the peach to make them thrive better in sandy soil, and roses when grafted on Manetti stock tolerate more sandy soil.

Unquestionably the world's most costly tangible substance is produced in the United States' giant $500,000,000 Oak Ridge radio-isotope plant. In 1949 the entire output of the plant weighed less than one ten-thousandth of an ounce, and the average shipment of this stuff weighed less than the graphite used in writing one's name. Much of the material produced at Oak Ridge is dangerous to handle. Materials are stored in lead-shielded tunnels. Workmen in some cases use long poles, viewing their work in looking glasses, since to gaze at the stuff direct, even through smoked glasses, is too dangerous to the eyes. Special bath showers are provided in the plant into which workers can dash and be drenched should any of the deadly matter come in contact with their bodies. Shipments are made in lead containers weighing as much as hundreds of pounds.
