DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

THE PRICE OF SPORT

For that called sport some others may
In death or pain and terror pay.
—Old Mother Nature.

Bobby Coon was in trouble. During his life Bobby Coon had been in trouble many times but never in worse trouble than he was in now. Trouble is part of the every-day life of most of the Green Forest and Green Meadow folk. Not only was Bobby in trouble, but he was in pain, very great pain. He was paying for what three hunters called sport. Bobby had been shot. It happened when Bobby was treed by a Dog, one trained to hunt Raccoons. Bobby had started for the safety of a rocky ledge deep in the Green Forest but he hadn't been able to run fast enough to get there. He was too fat, due to good living and little exercise. One cannot be fat and run well. So he had climbed a tall tree and found shelter in an old nest that had belonged to Redtail the Hawk at the foot of that tree the Dog had barked

He couldn't hurry and all the time he was afraid.

A TWO-EDGED SWORD

The South player in today's deal was shrewd in the bidding and adept in the play

South was a little fancy in this bidding, by mentioning hearts, but he wanted to get as much information as possible. The really bad bid was made by West, when he doubled six spades. South inferred very definitely from this double that West had the spade king and the missing ace, and so tried out six notrump in the hope that enough tricks could be taken without bringing in the spade suit. It is true that six notrump had very little chance, but six spades had none!

West, held pressed for an opening lead, selected his top diamond. East wisely refused to cover dummy's ten, and South overtook the trick with the jack, to lead the club queen. West, with a lack of imagination which he was soon to regret, won the trick with the club ace and shifted to a heart. South captured East's queen, and laid down the A-K of diamonds, discarding two spades from dummy, then cashed the heart jack and led a heart to the ace.

Now, one the run of clubs, both defenders felt relentless "pressure". When three cards were left, dummy's holding was the spade queen, a low heart, and the last club. East still had the 9-4 of spades and the diamond queen. South had kept the A-8 of spades and the diamond nine. West had the K-5 of spades and the high heart. The last club made East discard a spade to keep his diamond. South thereupon discarded the diamond, and it was West's turn to be squeezed. He had to keep the high heart, hence had to give up his guard for the spade king. The result was that South overtook the spade queen with the ace and cashed the eight to fulfill the doubled slam.

until the three hunters got there. The tree was too big to climb easily. Bobby couldn't be seen and so the hunters could be sure he was up there. One of them raised his gun and fired into the nest twice. He thought that if there were any one in the nest it would drive him out. It didn't. The hunters decided there was no one there and moved on. The Dog was already barking on another trail. Those hunters were having a good time. This was sport. When they got home they would talk about what a good time they had had.

Meanwhile Bobby Coon lay in the nest of Redtail the Hawk. He was whimpering softly for he was badly hurt. He had been shot in one hind leg, the right one. How it ached. And there was nothing he could do about it except to lick the wound. Those shots had torn through the nest as if it were paper.

"What shall I do?" moaned Bobby over and over. You see he was a long way from home. When he tried to move that leg it hurt dreadfully. After a long time Bobby managed to crawl out of the nest and slowly, climb down that tree. He couldn't hurry, and all the time he was afraid. He was afraid that that Dog and those hunters would come back. Slowly, oh so slowly, he made his way home to the hollow tree in that part of the Green Forest that belonged to Farmer Brown. He was safe there. He knew it. No hunters with dreadful guns were allowed there. It was daylight when he reached his hollow tree. It seemed to him that he could never, never climb up to the doorway of his home. But he did. He was still whimpering as he slowly climbed down to the bed at the bottom of the hollow. He continued to whimper as he licked his wound. Faintly from far off in the Green Forest came the bang of a dreadful gun. Bobby Coon shivered. Was someone else being hurt in the name of sport?

Bobby wasn't a cry-baby. No indeed. He was anything but a cry-baby, but he continued to whimper for a little while. That wounded leg was growing more and more stiff. The more stiff it became the more it hurt when he tried to move it. How was he ever going to get out of his home and climb down that tree to get something to eat? How was he ever going to get a drink of water when he needed it? Bobby didn't think about those things just then, but he would later.
