BERLIN, Sept. 22 - (Reuters) - A tall British brigadier and a rotund Soviet colonel met tonight on a road in "no man's land" - the juncture of the British and Russian sectors of Berlin.

Punctually at 6 p.m. Col. Lenick and six-foot-two-inch Brig. H. M. Curtis met for an on-the-spot effort to settle a dispute which arose when Russian troops moved the road barrier 150 yards back into British sector territory Tuesday.

The peace talks failed. Behind the two men the Russians had erected a huge red-and-white banner with the words: "Korea for the Koreans-Germany for the Germans - Tommy, go home." After four minutes' conversation through interpreters the British brigadier returned to his car. He told reporters there was "no story." As the Russian colonel and Brig. Curtis, chief of the British Military Mission at Potsdam, drove away, British soldiers lit arc lamps, which they trained on the cross-roads. The light picked up more Red Army soldiers waiting behind the trees on the Soviet side of the zonal frontier.
