

Roy Passes Plante for Second Place

On Saturday night in Denver, Colorado Avalanche goaltender Patrick Roy passed Jacques Plante for second position on the all-time wins list. Roy picked up win number 435 of his career with a 4-1 victory over the lowly Tampa Bay Lightning and gave Colorado its 30th win of the season.

Roy, 34, is now just 13 wins shy of the all-time wins record held by Terry Sawchuk with 447. The record is possible but the Avalanche would have to win 13 of their remaining 15 games in order for it to happen. Earlier this season Colorado had a ten game win streak but they haven't been winning consistently since the All-Star Game in February.

The record doesn't seem to be distracting Roy at all. He is concentrated on getting the Avalanche a better seeding in the playoffs than the record. The Avalanche sit in seventh place in the Western Conference which would pit them against the Dallas Stars if the playoffs were to begin today.

The playoffs has been the time when Patrick Roy begins to shine. He holds the record for the most playoff wins in history with 110 and has three Stanley Cup rings to show for it. He came out of nowhere in the 1986 playoffs to lead the Montreal Canadiens to a championship. In 1993, Roy helped carry the Canadiens to another championship and his second Conn Smythe trophy as the playoff's most valuable player. In 1995, Roy was traded to the Colorado Avalanche after a falling out with the Canadiens management. He was part of another Stanley Cup championship in June 1996 when the Avalanche defeated the Florida Panthers in a four game sweep.

It is inevitable that Patrick Roy will break the record some time this year; either this month or in the Fall of the new season. The only question is where? It was rumoured earlier this season that the Avalanche were looking to trade Roy to make room for their goaltender of the future Marc Denis. With the way Roy is playing now this seems very unlikely but the way the National Hockey League wheels and deals its players he might end up somewhere else.

Whatever happens next season, Patrick Roy will become the all-time wins leader. □
