AGRICULTURAL NEWS

P.E.I. Department of Agriculture

URGENCY AND DESTINY

A great deal has been written and said about the requirements needed for a successful farmer. Generally good buildings, fine livestock and a bank account are accepted as proof of success. Certainly when all three are present it is difficult to dispute the evidence. Generally the man who accumulates these outward appearances of success has been characterized by a sense of urgency.

He has felt the necessity of planning his daily, seasonal and yearly work and taken steps to see that the program laid out was followed. Relaxation and successful farming usually do not go hand in hand. There is always work to be done or planned and the point is never reached where the farmer can say "The work is all done."

Added to all these material and immediate considerations the good farmer is thinking in terms of future generations and the sort of legacy he leaves. It is this sort of consideration which impels a farmer to plant trees in the shade of which he may never sit. The windbreak which is planted today may be for more shelter to those who come after the planter.

Today's living standards, the education provided for the family all have a bearing on what happens in the next century. The real farmer must be aware of not only the immediate considerations but also of the interests of those who will follow him for many years to come.

While a sense of urgency and a sense of destiny may make an unlikely team nevertheless both are important parts of the farmer's make up.

WELCOME THE TOURISTS

The variety of number plates and increased traffic prove the presence of that welcome visitor described as "the tourist". The comfort and welfare of the tourist are not the immediate responsibility of the farmer. However, this does not mean that the farmer does not have a very important stake in the tourist industry. The visitor consumes in large quantities and at unusually profitable prices locally produced products. That these products should be of good quality and tempting appearance goes without saying.

The tourist industry can be a real dollar earner for agriculture and present prospects point to a continued development in this direction.

THE VERDANT COUNTRYSIDE

As of July 1, the weather went on its good behaviour with a fine balance of showers and heat which have promoted very rapid growth and very deep coloring. The potato fields are a picture to behold and within a short time as they come into blossom will constitute a 40,000-acre flower garden.

Grain fields are showing excellent growth with marvellous color and prospects of heavy yields. Even the hay crop which was in the doldrums has suddenly reformed and now gives promise of a brighter future.

The province is a picture which should be a joy not only to the visitors but to those who live with it as well.

CHECK THE CATTLE

Once cattle are turned out there is a tendency to feel that they do not require much attention. In most respects this may be true but it does not hold to far as lice are concerned. It can hardly ever be taken for granted that animals are free from lice.

An examination of calves and young cattle will often reveal the presence of parasites and the need for doing something about it.

REALLY RIG

As India strives to improve the health and nutrition of her people, the world's largest dairy farm has been established to supply milk to Bombay.

Sandwiched in between the Arabian Sea and a lagoon 20 miles north of Bombay, the Aarey milk colony daily distributes 500,000 bottles of fresh, pasteurized buffalo milk to 1,500,000 persons in the seaport city.

In 10 years the 3,500-acre colony, blending state and private enterprise, has earned a reputation as representing one of the most successful attempts at large-scale cattle "colonization" in Asia. Its 50 dairy units house 15,000 cattle in a park-like setting with tree-lined roads and picnic grounds, forming a popular tourist attraction.

"We are trying to provide a regular supply of pure milk at a price within reach of all classes," said English-trained R.S. Titus, one of many farm supervisors who also studies dairying in New Zealand, Denmark and the Netherlands.

CONTRAST

The power machinery of today and the easily cultivated fields of the province present a marked contrast to the situation that existed when the early settlers arrived. For the most part the province was heavily wooded and the first problem confronting the pioneer was the necessity of clearing enough land to get started on.

With axe and hoe the clearing of two acres was a big year's work so that 100 acres could easily represent the endeavour of a lifetime. But the land was cleared with backbreaking labour and curiously and regretfully too in many cases the trees are taking over again.

Recently a visit to an unoccupied farm disclosed the fact that the beaver had, by damming up the stream which ran across the farm lane shut off access to the property. After 100 years of agricultural activity on the part of man the beaver had re-established his ancient domain.

COUNTRY CAUCUS

On July 24 and 25 at St. Dunstan's University two days will be devoted to a study of the marketing, sociological and economic problems affecting agriculture. The first day will be farmers' day and the second one will be off teachers with the purpose of acquainting that important group with some of the problems affecting the rural community farm life.

Discussions on marketing will feature James MacNeill, director of marketing of Nova Scotia and Dr. Waldo Walsh, deputy minister of agriculture of Nova Scotia, with an address on the "Farmers and the Future."

The printed program for the caucus presents an interesting balance and those who attend will have a profitable experience.

FEDERATION VISITORS

At this time of the year the Federation office is visited daily by persons outside the province. Some are farm people on holiday, others are active in federation and farm organization work while some are government officials either provincial or federal. In all cases they are welcome and the Federation office thus becomes a means of extending courtesies on behalf of Island farmers.

In some cases information on the province is required, in others guidance in travelling is necessary. However, regardless of the requirements the office extends a welcome to our summer farm visitors.

Weekend Briefs

QUEEN ELIZABETH as a person: what are her likes and dislikes, what is her attitude toward her work, how does she relax? A new book titled How The Queen Reigns, by Dorothy Laird, is a behind-the-scenes portrait of the Queen. On Saturday The Evening Patriot's Weekend Magazine brings readers the first of two exclusive excerpts from the book.

BEING TALL has disadvantages, true, but for Bob and Joan Cunningham it's something to be proud of. Bob is six feet, 10½ inches tall, and Joan is six foot two. Weekend's photofeature about this Vancouver couple ends with some good advice to those tall enough to change a ceiling light bulb without a ladder.

THE PRINCESS AND THE PIRATES. A romantic tale that's every bit true. An Irish princess fled by ship from her troubled homeland, was captured by Dutch pirates, rescued by British privateers and carried off to Newfoundland. Exciting reading in Weekend, and an intriguing glimpse into Canadian history.

DEIRDRE BATTERSBY, a London (England)-born model, is really a country girl at heart. Recently she kept a date with a camera on a Quebec farm, and the resulting photos are a delight to the eye. Meet this pretty Montrealeise in this issue of Weekend Magazine.

SALADS! All sorts and sizes, all refreshing and nutritious. A special treat from Weekend Food Editor Margaret Oliver this week. Cucumber-Olive Mould, Summer Shrimp Salad, Tomatoes Vinagrette — certain to tempt even the most jaded summer appetite.

SUMMER READING at its brightest is a distinctive feature of The Evening Patriot, with Weekend Magazine and 16 pages of color comics. It is the only Island paper with these distinctive attractions.
