Opening lead — king of diamonds.

There is one convention used during the defense of a hand that is worth its weight in gold when the proper situation comes along.

The best defense in most hands would be a difficult goal to attain if it were not recognized signals and other defensive conventions are available to help the defenders guide each other during the play.

The hand shown was played in a duplicate tournament. At most tables a final contract of four spades was reached. But whether or not the contract was made depended on how well the defense functioned.

The king of diamonds was uniformly opened. Where East signaled for the nine, West continued with the ace and another diamond. Declarer ruffed, and had no trouble bringing home ten tricks.

But where East signaled on the opening lead with the queen of diamonds, West was able to continue with a low diamond to the jack. A heart return then enabled the defenders to capture two heart tricks and defeat the contract.

Both plays—the nine and the queen—were signals for a diamond continuation. But one turned out to be effective, while the other was fatal.

It is true that West could save the situation, where the nine was used as a signal, by underleading his ace at trick two. But this would have been a dangerous play.

East's diamond holding might have consisted of 9-5, in which case, his nine play, the beginning of a high-low signal to show a doubleton, would have been correct, and an underlead of the ace would then have turned out disastrously.

The signal with the queen, however makes West's next play easy The queen is conventionally not used as a signal in such circumstances unless it is backed up by the jack.

Hence, West's underlead of the ace at trick two would become automatic, since he would know partner had the jack. And the heart return for which the underlead shrieks would become equally automatic.

Report Sees Dismissal Of Professor As An Injustice

TORONTO (CP)—Prof. Harry S. Crowe is a "victim of injustice" and his dismissal from the faculty of Winnipeg's United College was based on "less than a shred of evidence," says the report of an investigation by a committee of the Canadian Association of University Teachers.

The 78-page report. made public Monday night, says improper use was made by authorities of the United Church school of a letter written by the 36-year-old history professor to a colleague. The letter first fell into the hands of the principal, Dr. H. W. Lockhart.

The letter, described by the principal as a "profoundly disturbing" document, has not been made public although comment from those who have read it make clear it contains elements of criticism of some members of the faculty.

CENTRAL ISSUE

The letter was the central issue in a decision by the board of regents July 2 to order Prof. Crowe's dismissal with a year's notice. The board later summarily fired him after an exchange of communications over questions of salary and contract terms.

The committee report says the letter's contents are not "central to the matters under inquiry" and that publication would be, "without justification, making further inroads upon privacy of personal communication.

It says Prof. Crowe was wronged and that to rectify the situation the board of regents should invite him to resume teaching duties at the rank he had when dismissed and at a salary level in keeping with his ability and length of service. A graduate of the college, he began teaching there in 1950.

INVASION OF PRIVACY

The fact that Dr. Lockhart read a personal letter not addressed to him and later discussed it with the board of regents was "an invasion of personal privacy," the committee report says.

It adds that the dismissal of Prof. Crowe was "an unjust and unwarranted invasion of the security of academic tenure to which he was entitled."

It describes the handling of the situation by Dr. Lockhart and the board as "tactless and arbitrary" and declares Prof. Crowe was dismissed "without a hearing and without any specification of charges."

The investigation was carried out by a two-man committee of Vernon C. Fowke, professor of economics at the University of Saskatchewan, chairman, and Bora Laskin, professor of law at the University of Toronto.

Typhoon Heads Towards Japan

TOKYO (AP)—Typhoon Nancy hurled 150 - mile - an - hour northward across the Pacific toward Japan Monday.

The big storm was located 700 miles south southeast of Okinawa by U.S. Air Force weather spotters.

It is moving northeast at 12 m.p.h. on a path that would miss the U.S. base and place it 400 miles east southeast of Okinawa by Wednesday. This path is aimed directly at Japan.
