New Inventoin.

I have invented and patented on July 24, 1897, a new straw elevator and shaker attached to any fan. It cleans all grain perfectly first cleaning, all grain is taken out of the straw. It has been well tested. It only takes about 1/2 of the power for to drive it of any other machine for that purpose in the market. I ask every intending purchaser to see one of the Week's shakers before purchasing any other. Any person infringing on the patent will be dealt with according to the law. I have appointed Mr. Walter Grant of Mill View, Lot 49, as manufacturing agent. He will receive orders; also myself

THE CALL OF THE ANGELS.

Lyn thar, patient from day ter day, Wearin his poor little life away, But never complainin, an when she cried, His mother, settin thar at his side, Layin his hand in hers, so kind, An tellin her, "Mother, never mind!" Though he knowed well, an we wuz shore Death wuz waitin outside the door. "I'd like ter stay whar my own folks be, But I hear the angels callin me!" (Poor little feller, so pale an slim, What did the angels want with him?)

Lyn thar, patient, from night ter night, An she like a ghost in the lonesome light— His mother—holdin his hand as though Not even fer death would she let him go; An hearin the wind, so soft an sweet, An sayin: "It's the fall of the angels' feet! I'd like ter stay whar my own folks be, But they're always callin—callin me!" An still with his eyes on her face, so kind, An whisperin, "Mother, never mind!" (Poor little feller, so pale an slim, What did the angels want with him?)

Lyn thar, sleepin, from day ter day, Under the green leaves an under the gray, It's long since the angels took him away, An the mother kneels in the dark ter pray; An she says, when the nights are long an chill, She feels his hand in her own hand still, But she knows it wuz God's an the angels' will. But, as fer me, from day ter day An night ter night I hear him say (Fer all the comfort they bring ter me): "I'd like ter stay whar my own folks be!" (Poor little feller, so pale an slim, What did the angels want with him?) —Frank L. Stanton.

STARTING THE DAY RIGHT.

Everything depends on a good start. The racer who gets the best start usually turns up first at the winning post. How do you start out for your day's work? Feeling tired and languid, or fresh and invigorated? A teaspoonful of Abbey's Effervescent Salt in a tumbler of water, taken every morning before breakfast, will freshen you up, and fit you for the work that is ahead of you. Here is what an eminent English physician says of it: From Dr. W. H. Wright, L.R.C.P., L.M., M.R.C.S.E., L.S.A.I., Medical Officer of Health, London, England. "I have great pleasure in bearing testimony to your excellent preparation. I take it every morning before my cold bath, and it keeps me in the best of health and spirits. I may say by its continued use during a terrible epidemic of La Grippe I escaped attack, although often worn out with the extra fatigue and great strain put upon me when grappling with it. It keeps the blood cool and allays fever, and thus keeps the system in a condition of insusceptibility to Diphtheria, Fevers, and other blood disorders. I also find it a valuable anti-rheumatic."

This valuable English preparation is for sale by all druggists. Price 2/6 or 60 cts., a bottle. Trial size, 25 cts. Send for a sample bottle. THE ABBEY EFFERVESCENT SALT CO., LIMITED, MONTREAL, CANADA.

A young woman who has a position as assistant librarian at one of the largest public libraries in Pennsylvania says that she has a keen sympathy for the ticket agents at railway stations—a sympathy born of kindred woes.

One day two well dressed young women approached the desk. One of them took a memorandum from her pocketbook.

"Can you tell me how many yards—oh, that's the wrong list!" she said, hastily bringing forth another slip of paper. "Here it is. Will you please tell me who is Rudyard Kipling's favorite author?"

"I am unable to tell you, never having heard that he had one," I admitted. "Dear me!" said the young woman irritably. "It's one of the questions for our next club meeting. Well, which one of Thackeray's books brought him in the largest income?"

"That you can probably find out by consulting a book the number of which I will give you," I said, turning to one of my reference drawers as I spoke. "Oh, I can't stop to look it up!" she said hurriedly. "I thought you could tell me at once. Well, there's one more thing, Bessie Cummock, my cousin in St. Louis, had a splendid book when I was there last year for anecdotes of famous people. I can't remember the name of it or who wrote it, but it was about so big"—illustrating with one finger on the desk—"and it had a dark green cover. Now, can you tell me what it is? Some day when I have time I'd like to get it out. Of course you must have it in the library."

For the third time I was obliged to confess my inability to give her direct information. She looked at me with a piercing gaze and turned away, saying audibly to her companion: "There! That just shows what all this talk about their being examined for positions in public libraries amounts to! Three perfectly simple questions, all on literary subjects, and she couldn't answer one of them!"—Youth's Companion.

The Dressmaker's Trick.

One of the most successful modistes in town owes her prosperity very largely to a scheme so simple it is strange that no one had ever thought of it before. It is as follows: The dressmaker's establishment is in a double house—that is to say, one with rooms on either side of its hallway in the middle. One side is dedicated to one sort of customers, the fat; the other to another sort, the lean. No "plump" woman was ever known to pass beyond the portals leading to the side not intended for her, and no "slyph" has ever yet been permitted to acquaint herself with the mysteries of the apartments consecrated to those of adipose figure. Of course, it is the mirrors. Every dressmaker has them of the two sorts, but not every dressmaker has been shrewd enough to keep the two so distinct and separate.

The fat customer at this particular establishment sees herself on all sides in glasses that make her look like the slyph she isn't, while the living skeleton herself would present rounded contours if reflected by the magic mirrors lining the walls of the thin rooms. "Thick" and "thin" is the way the two sets of apartments are designated by the employees of the establishment. The audience room into which a brand new patron is ushered for the first time is without mirrors of any kind, and the first thing that Elise says to Celeste, when she announces the new arrival, is, "Shure, an is she thick or thin?"—New York Sun.

OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

A Cane Made From Wood From the Spanish Warship San Pedro.

"I have in my possession," says Mr. William W. Birth, the senior member of the Oldest Inhabitants' association, "a walking stick the history of which is at the present time very interesting. It was a part of the hand rail of a stairway leading to the cabin of the commander of the Spanish warship San Pedro, which was blown up in the Caribbean sea off the coast of Venezuela or Colombia the year before the termination of the long continued and persistent struggles of the South American states for their freedom from Spain.

"In 1819, I think it was, the San Pedro was sent from the mother country with several hundred troops to take the places of a similar number who had served their allotted time and were to be returned to their homes. There was also on board the ship about $1,000,000, sent to pay off the troops and meet other demands. While the ship lay off the coast, transferring troops, a fire broke out on board and reached the magazine. How many persons perished I have now no means of ascertaining, but the presumption is there was a very great number. The money all went down with the ship and was at the bottom of the sea undisturbed for more than a quarter of a century. A wrecking company of Baltimore got permission of the South American government off whose coast at a known locality the ship lay to search for treasure, paying probably a percentage of the result to Venezuela or Colombia. The find was the recovery of some $25,000 or $30,000 in silver. Several years after this effort another attempt was made to recover something of value, but the motion of the sea had so covered the ship with heavy masses of sand that only a small amount was secured.

"On leaving the wreck the mahogany rail of the stairway was taken off to be made into canes. The treasure, together with the rail and a small brass cannon found on board, was deposited in the Union Bank of Maryland in Baltimore. I had then living a lifelong friend, an officer of the bank, who was presented with one of the canes made from the rail of the ship's cabin. He had the stick mounted with a silver eye and silk cord and tassel and presented it to me. And for a number of years I have been and am now using it.

"I saw at the bank black masses of the coin recovered, which the intense heat of the burning ship had melted and mixed with coal ashes and cinders."—Washington Star.

Perfectly Cured

Weak and Low Spirited - Nervous Prostration - Appetite Poor and Could Not Rest.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Hood's Sarsaparilla to others. It has been the means of restoring my wife to good health. She was stricken down with an attack of nervous prostration. She suffered with headaches and her nerves were under severe strain. She became very low spirited and so weak she could only do a little work without resting. Her appetite was poor, and being so weak she could not get the proper rest at night. She decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, as we had heard it highly praised, and I am glad to state that Hood's Sarsaparilla has perfectly cured all her ailments." G.
