SOMEBODY HELPED HIM

At 3,000 feet above the Marin County Hills of California on the end of a trail holding rope Danny Novell, 12, looked up at balloonist William R. Berry and said: 'Mister, please help me.' Sunday in Letterman General Hospital.

In San Francisco Danny was chipped and happy after his harrowing experience Saturday. Berry brought the balloon down quickly. The boy was not seriously hurt. He is being treated for a chaged left hand and shock. The boy.

Blueprint Seen For Lakes Peace

By ROBERT RICE J.MONTREAL (CP) — Like a massive igloo puzzle, the bits and pieces are beginning to fall in place in a new blueprint for labor peace in the troubled Great Lakes shipping industry. With ships moving without harassment in the St. Lawrence Seaway and across the Great Lakes, labor issues are an overall plan taking shape to clean up lawlessness and corruption exposed by a government inquiry in the Seafarers' International Union of Canada.

But the plan has so many interlocking pieces it could be likened to a loop-updating relations between Canada and the United States and straining the unity of North American labor. The marine union trustees, appointed by the federal government last October to wield a new brow in the SIU, say they need time and the cooperation of organized labor to put their long-range program into effect.

Mining Firms Issue Stock To Keep Pace With Big Boom

By KEN SMITH Canadian Press Business Editor TORONTO (CP) — Mining companies, spurred by the sudden surge in public buying of speculative stocks, are issuing new shares frantically to enrich their treasuries. The Toronto, Montreal and Canadian Stock Exchanges cleared a total of 10,000 new shares in various companies Friday to be distributed to the public. Mansell Ketchen, administrative vice-president of the Toronto Stock Exchange, has never seen anything like the rush of new financings. 'It's just fantastic,' he said. In addition to the 7,000,000 new shares approved by the Toronto Exchange Friday, many more applications are being processed. The exchange keeps tabs on the timing, number of shares and prices of new financing deals under a regulation that requires listed companies to file public notification of any significant changes in their affairs. Issuing additional stock comes under the heading of a significant change.

New shares are made available to the public—if the exchange approves an underwriting and options. Under a new regulation, a brokerage house agrees to buy a specified number of shares at a set price from a company, in hopes that the market will make it possible to sell the shares to the public at a profit. Options make it possible for the underwriting brokerage to get additional shares if the market falls below a specified time. If the options are not taken up, the shares revert to the company's treasury. Many of the companies that issued new shares Friday have interests in the Porcupine area in Northern Ontario, near the site of a major zinc-copper-silver strike close to Timmins. Others, though, also put out new shares to try to win a share of investors' dollars. Meanwhile market analysts are still shaking their heads over the trading frenzy that saw the Toronto exchange turn over 28,704,000 shares Friday, the heaviest volume ever experienced in North America. It easily beat the 16,000,000 shares traded Thursday, the previous Toronto exchange record, and the 16,410,000 shares that changed hands in New York during the 1929 crash.

Everyone was asking why the amazing volume, but no one could answer it with assurance. The general consensus was that the speculative fever, lying dormant since the last penny-stock binge six years ago, suddenly burst into an epidemic. 'It was like a crack game,' said one veteran analyst. 'Stock was being bought by people who knew nothing at all about what they were buying.' Another said the whole atmosphere had been ripe for a boom, and the conformation of the strike by the United States Texas Gulf Company was the needed spark. Still another saw it as a simple case of people with a bit of money wanting to get more. They hope to get in and out quick, and make a profit. Most expected the buying spree to continue for a few days, although probably at a lower volume.

Schooner Expensive For City

VANCOUVER (CP) — Like many other boat owners, city council here is finding it expensive to maintain a second-hand boat bought at a bargain price. More than $150,000 has been spent in the last 10 years on the old RCMP schooner, St. Roch, a 104-foot vessel which cost only $80,200 to build in 1928. Council has ordered designs prepared for a $120,000 open wood and glass shelter for the former police patrol boat, the first and so far the only vessel to sail completely around the New American continent. Council stipulated the shelter would not be built until the federal government gave assurance Ottawa would pay $100,000 to restore the St. Roch to the condition it was in 1940-42 when it became the first vessel to sail east from the Pacific to the Atlantic around the north of North America — the famous Northwest Passage. The city of Vancouver obtained the St. Roch from the federal government in 1954 and paid $5,000 to transport the vessel here from eastern Canada. The boat remained in Burrard Inlet for four years until 1958, when the city fathers decided to install it in drydock as the focal point for a new maritime museum.

A $137,000 contract was awarded to move the vessel from the inlet and to construct a seawall and concrete erdiate at the new location. In 1960, a $100,000 safety net was installed off the St. Roch while visiting the museum, and in 1962, emergency repairs to the boat cost the city another $8,800. Museum enthusiasts have been agitating to have the boat restored at a cost of $100,000 since 1961, when there were reports of rot in the historic hull. Council decided on the shelter after a board of administration report said maintenance of the restored vessel would cost $14,000 annually if it were safe exposed to inclement weather. Even under shelter, estimates of the annual maintenance cost range between $4,000 and $11,000. At one point, late in 1962,
