BEAUTY AND THE BEAU.

The Show of Gallantry Rebuked by Genuine Courtesy.

The car was crowded. It happened that only men were standing, with the exception of a colored woman, in the middle of the car. But at a corner a woman dressed in the top of the mode got on. She stood next the door, and plainly there was a chance for some masculine person to be gallant. An old beau, who was seated near the center, was obviously fascinated by the appearance of this beautiful female and bobbed his head to catch her eye. Finally succeeding he arose, beckoned to her and murmured:

"Won't you take my seat, madam?"

The colored woman, standing directly in front of him, heard this and, turning, thanked him gratefully as she made a movement toward the vacant space. With indignation wrinkling his tinted nose and spilling for a moment the gracious air which he had assumed, he pushed her back, with both hands at her elbows, as he exclaimed:

"Oh, no; not for you, ma'am!"

His adjustment of expression was rapid as he turned once more to her of the handsome face and fashionable clothes and made way. Then, with a smile at his neighbors which plainly said, "Didn't I manage that well?" he leaned comfortably on his stick.

The favored one had not noticed the little play which had been enacted for her benefit, but a young girl who sat in the next seat was an observer and saw the warm red deeply flush under the black skin of the other woman and the tears come in the dark eyes. She saw the mouth quivering, and her own eyes snapped. With a glance at "his complacency," unmistakably expressive of her scorn and indignation, she quickly rose, touched the woman on the arm and gently said:

"Take my seat. I'm getting out at the next corner."

Then, flashing a look at the man, under which his expression of self congratulation rapidly changed to something near to sheepishness, she passed out of the car, and more than one man there would have bet that she had not intended to get off at that corner.—New York Sun.

EARLY WHALE FISHERY.

It Was Probably First Followed by the Biscayans or Norwegians.

As to who among northern nations may justly claim the honor of first daring to attack the mighty whale there is some little doubt. But the balance of probability inclines to the Biscayans or Norwegians. We have a reasonably definite account in Orosius of bay whaling having been carried on from the North cape along the shores of the White sea in the ninth century. Langebek, a Danish writer, asserts positively that the Norwegians were the pioneers of whale hunting on the coasts of their own country about the year 870. But there are many references to whale fishing in the chronicles of that period. The "Translation of les Miracles de St. Vaast" tells of a donation by William the Conqueror of a tithe of whales caught at Dives to the Convent of the Holy Trinity at Caen. A bull of Pope Eugene III gives a tithe of the tongues of whales caught at Merri to the church at Coutances. These two will probably suffice as a sample of the references to the cetacea in those early times. Historians, however, are agreed that the Basques and Biscayans first ventured far to sea from their own shores and so became the originators of the whale fishery proper.

About 1575 a combined fleet of Biscayan and Iceland vessels, numbering 50 or 60 sail, commenced whaling upon the coasts of Newfoundland, Iceland and southern Greenland. In 1594 the English appear to have awakened to the prospect of profit from the whale fishery, for we read that several ships were fitted out in that year at Bristol for a whaling voyage to Cape Breton. One of them, the Grace of Bristol, found between 700 and 800 blades or laminae of whalebone on the shores of St. George's bay, where two large Biscayan ships had been wrecked three years before. This seems to have been the first instance of the importation of whalebone into England.—London Spectator.

Where All Kissed Their Escorts.

The diversions of New Yorkers of the last century were very much milder than are those of the present day. "In winter a century ago," Mrs. Burton Harrison writes in "The Ladies' Home Journal," "when not assembled for skating upon the Collech, the favorite amusement of Hans and Katrina seems to have been a sleighing frolic in Jan Derickson's four horse sledge to Harlem, where they had a dance and a supper at the hostelry of Mynheer Borsum. Ten couples (packed close, as it suited the young men and maidens to ride, said the old chronicler) was the sleigh load, and after a repast of bread and hot chocolate, concluding some hours spent in capering to the fiddlers' strains, the party returned to town. Speeding by moonlight over hard frozen roads, past manor house and cottage wrapped in deep repose, the chief adventure of the return was apt to be a stop on the Kissing bridge (at Second avenue and Fiftieth street, across the rivulet flowing from Tea Water spring), at which point custom allowed the cavalier to demand of the lady he escorted the privilege of a special salutation. Unless this toll were yielded the cortege came to a halt, or else it turned in another direction."

How People Sleep.

In England the old four poster bedstead is still the pride of the nation, but the iron or brass bedstead is beating it out of the field. The English beds are the largest beds in the world. A peculiarity of the German bed is its shortness. Besides that, it consists frequently in part of a large down pillow or upper mattress which spreads over the person and usually answers the purpose of all the other ordinary bedclothing combined. In the tropics men sleep in hammocks or upon mats or grass. The East Indian unrolls his light, portable charpoy or mattress, which in the morning is again rolled together and carried away by him. The Japanese lie upon matting with a stiff, uncomfortable, wooden neck rest. The Chinese use low bedsteads, often elaborately carved and supporting only mats or coverlets. The ancient Greeks and Romans had their beds supported on frames, but not flat like ours. The Egyptians had a couch of a peculiar shape, more like an old fashioned easy chair, with hollow back and seat.—New York Ledger.

Finding Gives Not Ownership.

In the case of an individual who had claimed a reward for the restitution of a diamond ring which he had found Judge Finletter rendered a decision to the effect that the mere fact of finding the ring gave the finder no lien upon the property. The article had been lost, its loss was advertised and to keep it was practically larceny.—Philadelphia Record.
