Big Expansion In U. S. Air Strength Next Few Years

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27 (AP)—The United States Air Force is gearing its emergency mobilization program to a strength four times as powerful as that on hand before the Korean War.

Undersecretary John A. McCone said in an interview today that this applies to aircraft production, training of men, and bases for men and equipment.

The goal could be reached by late 1953 if ordered. The immediate program, to be completed in two years, calls roughly for doubling the number of air force groups, the number of men and the number of bases in the U. S.

The move toward the doubled air force already is obvious in plane orders, in putting wartime plane plants back into production, in disclosure that air force personnel soon will be more than double the pre-Korea strength of 412,000.

The output of air force combat-type planes already has risen to more than 100 a month from the pre-Korea rate of 110 a month, and will be doubled by next December.

But that is only a part of the program. The expansion is being handled in such a way that it can be doubled again later on. McCone said this means tooling plants to produce well in excess of quantities on order now.

When the North Korean Reds invaded last June, the air force had 46 groups. This force had already been increased to 84 groups, and there are indications the air force strength will be raised to about 100 groups within two years.

The planning framework on which the air force is working goes even further—to permit nearly 200 groups by the end of 1953. That's the air force concept of its role in a balanced, over-all military establishment of 8,000,000 men.
