THE PARK ROADWAY.

The judges of the Supreme Court of this Province having unanimously decided that the words of the act of 1876, supercede the plan referred to in that act, the City of Charlottetown can only appropriate for a roadway to the park, "a strip of the shore front." There is some talk about an appeal from this decision to the Supreme Court of Canada. This, we think, would be inadvisable. First, there is the risk that the judges of the higher court may agree with those of the lower, and then there is the certainty of postponing indefinitely the compromise which the good sense, as well as the interests, of both parties dictates. The city does not at all need a hundred feet of land in front of Government House; and the grounds of Government House would be seriously and unnecessarily circumscribed if the whole "hundred feet" were taken. On the other hand, Lieutenant-Governor Howlan is not at all disposed to be unreasonable about the matter. On the contrary, he has declared himself to be sincerely desirous that the Park Roadway shall be opened; and he is willing that the concession of sufficient land for that purpose shall be made. His objection to the action of the committee of the City Council was perfectly justifiable in view of the decision of the judges and the duty which he owes to himself and his successors in office; and his action and attitude in respect to the Park Roadway will, so far, compare favorably with that of Sir Robert Hodgson or any other of his predecessors. To suppose that he is ready to act the part of the dog in the manger is to suppose that which is contrary to the whole course and tenor of his career. In point of fact, Lieutenant-Governor Howlan has, we believe, expressed himself as ready to agree to the cession of land from Government House Farm amply sufficient for the purpose of a roadway to the park. It only remains, therefore, for representatives of the City Council and the Government to meet together and agree upon a reasonable course and plan, and have a bill, based thereupon, passed by the Legislature. We hope that this will be done in good time. Prompt action is desirable as well to prevent a needless waste of land as to afford a convenient means of communication with Victoria Park.

A SOLID REALITY.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND is deemed worthy of a series of articles in the Scottish American. In the first of the series the writer says:

"Tourists are beginning to find out that the name which they thought was a bit of rhetoric, or the boast of some Canadian rhymster, expresses a solid reality. There they can see, as possibly nowhere else within the same area, how very red soil may be, how very green the leaves and grass and how very blue the waters can be. An artist, who has wandered over Europe and America, confessed, as he sailed up a river from Charlottetown one summer afternoon, that in all his travels he had never witnessed such a rich study in landscape colouring as that offered by the water so very blue flowing past banks so very red and crowned by grass so very green, all intensified by the golden sunshine. An eminent evangelist, whose work took him to all parts of the continent, warmly praised the view of the West River (to be obtained from the Public Park of Charlottetown) as beyond doubt the finest bit of pastoral scenery he had ever seen. So that what the Island wants in quantity it has in quality. One does not expect a gem to be a very big thing, and certainly Prince Edward Island is a gem of purest ray serene—not only the gem of the Gulf to the outside world but to the islanders, who love it with a passion and pride peculiar to themselves."

In conclusion, the writer remarks that:

"A tunnel is talked about at intervals, but it is not likely that it will ever become a reality, as the present population and trade of the Island would scarcely warrant so large an expenditure. If, however, a tunnel were once built we have no hesitation in affirming the opinion that it would speedily lead to such an increase of population and traffic as would make Prince Edward Island as important in the commercial world as it is now attractive to the tourist world."

DR. POTTS' SERMOM.

IT is seldom that a Charlottetown congregation has the privilege of listening to such a sermon as the one given by Dr Potts last evening in the First Methodist Church. His text was from 2nd Matt., 2nd verse, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews." The sermon throughout was stirring and eloquent. His treatment of his subject, "The Quest for Truth," was such as to hold his immense audience spellbound from the beginning to the end of his discourse. An unusually large collection was taken at the close for the educational interests of the church which Dr. Potts represents.

KIDNEY FACTS.

In Jan., 1892 my son was taken with Kidney disease. Though attended by three physicians, and change of climate he grew worse and by '93 had fallen from 195 lbs to 95 lbs. In 10 days from starting to use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills we were able to move him home. In 4 months he gained 50 lbs. and was fully restored to health by the use of this medicine. Jno. S. BOOK REVIEW.

Annals of the Court of Oberon, by the Annalist, John Hunter Duvar. London—Digby, Long & Co.

Mr. Duvar is already known in the world of letters by several productions which have been well received, and favorably commented on by critics and reviewers. He prefers poetry to prose, insomuch that even when discarding the rhythmical cadence of verse, as in the volume before us, the poet is but slightly veiled. The themes, too, on which our author loves to bestow his literary toils, are chosen with a most excellent appreciation of his own powers of excelling. Fairy Land is the region in which the genius of Mr. Hunter Duvar loves to revel. The vivacious beings who form the population of that unseen commonwealth, their form of government, modes of life, revels, and curious enterprises, are as familiar to our author, as the tragedy of the Babes in the Wood, or the adventures of Robinson Cruso are to a modern schoolboy. How he came into possession of the facts here set forth, is sufficiently explained by the circumstance, that he was hypnotized by King Oberon, and ordered to become the Annalist and "unpaid attache" of the court of that renowned monarch. If the reader be curious to know what manner of man this mortal is, who was chosen to record the thrilling events of the court of the Fairy King, he is furnished with a portrait from the annalist's own pen. "I am," he says, "a man graver than my years. The world has saddned, not soured me. I am given to mooning about with books and lying under trees. I am generally considered harmless, and my views old-fashioned."

The plan of the work is happily conceived. The author sets the scenes—the annalist describes them. The entire population of Fairy Land is at the beck of the author, and he leads them into scenes where they can witness and be disgusted or amused with all the frivolity and insincerities of modern society.

The space at our disposal will not permit us to enter into a detailed account of the events recorded by the faithful annalist. One or two excerpts, however, may serve to give our readers an idea of Mr. Duvar's work, and induce them to have recourse to the volume itself for a deeper knowledge of its merits.

The fairies are, of course English fairies, and as they had heard mortal women talk of nothing but men, so it was decided in full council that the fairy Vivien with a suitable cortege should go to earth, seek out a matrimonial alliance, and report to her Government the ins and outs of fashionable married life. King Oberon decided, that "as all marriageable young American ladies are heiresses (or at least all that come to England are) Vivien should take a flight to America in that capacity." Without the aid of steamboat or locomotive, Vivien and her suite arrive at Newville-on-the-sea, and take up their quarters at the Grand Seraphic Hotel. Here is the author's description of Vivien's first appearance in public:—"When Vivien with her duenna at length ventured to appear in the ladies, salon, an extorted buzz of admiration broke for a moment the hum of conversation . . . . . Our beautiful heroine subsided on a fauteuil, and looked around curiously. She had never seen anything like this. Music was going on, chattering, laughing, yawning, make-believe of finger-work, and all the other elements that make up a society paradise. Quite a number of half-fledged youths and girls half grown were present and appropriated to themselves an offensive prominence. Snatches of conversation among the general company reached the ear, but the staple was unintelligible to our fairies, who had no antecedents. Mrs. A's receptions, B's dinners, Addy C's divorce, Mrs. D's jewels all seemed mixed up with each other, and interlacing the frequent repetition of the word "dollars" came in like a refrain. In the superb ball-room, Vivien had the good fortune to sit next to a Mrs. Coupon," a lively little girl of seventeen, most lavishly dressed, who was wife of a Stock Broker. She knew every body and everything, and seemed delighted to impart information." Never did anatomical demonstrator handle more deftly the scalpel than little Mrs. Coupon. She cut with an unerring hand straight to the diseased part of every man and woman's reputation—even her own husbands'—told how the malady had originated in each of her subjects, and never slackend in her exposition, till every man and woman in the room, waltzed before the eyes of our fairy with all their iniquities barely exposed to view. It in no way disconcerts Mrs Coupon to be accosted by the very subject suffering from her dissecting operations. She interrupts her work for a moment, hides the scalpel, answers blandly, and when the subject moves off, continues the cutting with more vigour than ever. Such were the conversational recreations of the Grand Seraphic. We wonder if they are confined to that stately institution!

One portrait more, and we finish. It is that of a fashionable fop at the close of the Nineteenth Century. "His shining silk hat had little brim to speak of, but what there was, was curly. An eyeglass attached to a black ribbon was screwed into his eye, from which it frequently fell down. A stiff upstanding shirt neck, in shape of a dog collar, of linen, or it might have been tin, nearly cut off his ears. His body clothes were a mystery appearing inaccessible to get into, and impossible to get out of. His limbs resembled a crane's terminating in shining boots, long and narrow, suggestive of sheathed claws instead of toes. Coat and etcetera were fearfully and wonderfully built to show the malconstruction of his person. Over his tight and short fancy vest (under which he wore corsets) was festooned a massive gold chain of the galley-slave pattern ("in this style 5s 6d free by mail") to which was appended a bunch of the gold-smith work of a Birmingham novelty company. His watch was ormulu, and he carried a cane with a dansense's leg for a top. His speech was drawling, his gait a crawl, and his whole aspect effete to the last degree. A few of him still survive at the present time of writing." We would suggest to our author in his next edition to make the boots of the above phenomenon tan, to put a single fold on his pantaloons at the boot, and set a cigarette in his mouth.

Either the author or his printer has made sad work with the quotation from Shelley on page 14. As it stands, it is a species of half and half far from agreeable. Further, why should our author, who can, when he chooses, write clear, crisp, idiomatic English, defile his compositions with such Yankeeisms as "a square deal" and "he stood him up"? Canadian writers should look to it that their style be formed, even as the style of the best writings of our Republican neighbors has been formed, on the best English models.

In conclusion, the work, although cleverly planned, and in many parts even elegantly written, will, we fear, fail to receive from the readers of modern light literature that appreciation which its many merits deserve. Its irreligion, in spite of our author's sly stab at the Jesuits and Ritualists, is far too feebly pronounced to allure the followers of Zola; while the disciples of Ouida will turn with indifference from a work of 246 pages which contains only one Magdalen, one case of seduction, and one child murder.

AN ADDRESS

To His Honor, George W. Howlan, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor, &c., &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOR,—

We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects of Murray Harbor, most heartily welcome you on this your first visit to this place since you assumed the high and responsible position as the representative of Royalty in this Province. We appreciate this visit all the more highly because our means of communication with the capital is attended with very considerable inconvenience owing to having no railway to Murray Harbor; but this want which is so universally recognized as indispensible to civilization, we hope to have supplied in the near future.

We thank your Honor for the very deep interest you have always taken in the progress and prosperity of our people, especially in regard to education and agriculture, two subjects of the very first importance to every civilized country. And we feel assured that your very presence here on this occassion will have a tendency to encourage our farmers in their efforts to make farming a continued success in this Province.

With our sincere wishes for the health and happiness of your good lady as well as your own, we beg to remain your most obedient servants,—

THE INTERNATIONAL YACHT RACE.

'Defender's' Successful Defence.

CANNONS ANNOUNCE THE AMERICAN VICTORY.

HIGHLANDS OF NAVESINK, Sept. 9.

At 11.55 on Saturday the committee hoisted the signal that the course outward would be east by south. At 12.15 the preparatory gun was fired. Immediately the yachts, with club topsails, fore-stays and jibs set, began to jockey for the most favorable position. It was only four seconds after the starting gun was fired at 12.20 that the Valkyrie crossed the line, Defender four seconds later. The wind was then blowing about five miles an hour. The Valkyrie, it was plainly seen, was doing the faster work. At one o'clock the breeze freshened to about seven miles an hour. At 2 o'clock the boats began a long board to starboard. The breeze stiffened up to about eight miles an hour, and with that increase the Defender began to overhaul the enemy. It was 2.55 when the Defender was on even terms with the other. Thence she gradually forged ahead, and at 3.30 it was estimated that the Yankee boat was three lengths ahead, and well to windward at that. The Defender passed the buoy first. In going around they eased off sheets on the starboard side and set their baloon jibs and topsails. The Valkyrie took in her jib and staysail, while the Defender hauled down only her jib. In all the reach the Defender continuously increased her lead over the Valkyrie and finished 8 minutes and 49 seconds ahead of her. The only thing to mar the pleasure was the action of certain excursion boats in going too close to windard of the racing yachts. When the Defender crossed the finish line she was greeted by cannons, whistles, tin hornes and the waving of handkerchiefs. The ovation continued for several minutes. The official time is as follows:— Defender—started 12.20: 50; outermark was made in 3.36: 39; and finished in 5.21: 14; elapsed time: 5.00: 24; corrected time: 4.59: 55

Valkyrie—Started at 12.40:46; outer mark, 3.39:52; finish, 5.29:38; elapsed time, 5.08:44; correct time, 5.08:44.

The second race takes place to-morrow.

LONDON, Sept. 9.

The Standard says: "Not only in the long beat to windward, but on the run back, also, the Defender showed herself to be distinctly superior to the Valkyrie III. The race does not afford a ground for hope that the tables will be turned.

The Chronicle says: "We do not give up hope yet. Perhaps Valkyrie III.'s skipper was not quite so sharp in taking advantage of the shifty winds off New York Bay as those to the manner born."

The Daily Telegraph says: "Such running and beating cannot have brought out the ultimate characteristics of the two crafts, though the accounts of the race are enough to show that the Defender is a very able and wonderful yacht."
