Russians Claim New Island Found

NEW YORK (AP) - The New York Times said Saturday the Russians are reported to have discovered an island in what was believed to be an open sea area between Australia and Antarctica. The Times says Antarctic experts were surprised by the report because the location specified is in a region crisscrossed many times by exploratory ships and whaling vessels without noting an island. The newspaper report of the finding came from Sir Douglas Mawson, Australia's noted Antarctic explorer, in a letter to an American colleague. Sir Douglas is quoted as saying the Russian scientific exploration vessel Ob discovered the island in April in latitude 59.5 degrees south. It was described as being 18 square miles in area and 450 miles from the nearest land—the Vincennes Bay area of Antarctica. Vincennes Bay is the site of an American station established for the International Geophysical Year studies.

French Warships Sail; Speculate To Join Rebels

VALLETTA, Malta (Reuters)—French warships, here for a NATO review, sailed unexpectedly Sunday night, officers wearing the Cross of Lorraine, symbol of Gen. Charles de Gaulle's wartime Free French movement. The carrier Lafayette and three cruisers left after Admiral Philippe Auboyneau, French Mediterranean commander, flew in from Algiers. French sources in Valletta said the ships had been recalled to France. (In Paris, a navy spokesman said the movement of the ships was perfectly normal and denied rumors that they were heading for either Algiers or Corsica.)

Couch Grass Is Controlled By Chemicals And Culture

OTTAWA.—The elimination of couch grass has been brought into the realm of practical possibility by the combined use of chemical and cultural methods. J.S. Lee of the Kentville, N.S. Experimental Farm, says chemicals alone will reduce couch grass to a point where it does not seriously interfere with crop production. The chemical Dalapon (sold under the trade name Dowpon) is applied to actively growing couch grass as a spray. It is absorbed through the leaves of the grass and will, under ideal conditions, result in almost 100 per cent kill of the couch grass roots. Present indications are that if spraying is followed by a summer of cultivation the couch grass will be completely eliminated.

(The agency said Halba was a key position of government troops and its fall was a "major victory.")
