Veal Shortcakes

The biscuit dough can be cut into squares with a floured knife, if you would like a change from the usual shape — or it may be shaped with a large round biscuit cutter. There is a good balance of solids and delicious sauce — and the whole thing tastes very much like chicken shortcake (which could, as a matter of fact, be made very much in the same way). Yield — 6 servings.

FOR THE VEAL AND SAUCE:

1 pounds stewing veal.
1-3 cup chopped onion.
1/2 cup sliced celery.
2 teaspoons vinegar.
3/4 teaspoon salt.
1/2 teaspoon monosodium glutamate, optional.
2 pepper berries.
Enough boiling water to cover (about 2 cups.)
1 cup sliced celery.
3 tablespoons butter.
1/2 cup veal stock.
1/2 cup milk.
3 tablespoons once-sifted enriched flour.
1/2 teaspoon pepper.
1-3 cup cold milk.
1 tablespoon chopped pimiento, optional.

Wipe the veal with a damp cloth and cut into 1-inch cubes. Put veal, onion, celery, vinegar, salt, monosodium glutamate if being used and pepper berries in a saucepan. Add just enough boiling water to cover. Cover closely and simmer until meat is just tender — about 1 hour.

While the meat is simmering, melt the butter in the upper pan of double boiler over low direct heat. Add the celery and simmer gently until celery is tender but not browned.

Add the 1/2 cup veal stock and 1/2 cup milk; heat over boiling water.

Blend the flour and pepper to a smooth paste with the 1-3 cup cold milk. Stir into celery mixture.

Cook, stirring constantly, until the sauce is smoothly thickened.

Cut the cooked veal into small cubes and add to sauce; add pimiento to leave or awhile the busy round of her day and shed her every care. "Where all thoughts die and good are born, out in the fields of the farms; to come where stubble bare, there to hear before it is too late, the last field-tune of the year; to follow perhaps those enchanting by-roads and lanes we are blessed with in island places, where one can be amazed and charmed now by the marvelous display of colors, perfect blending of shades. With inimitable taste and skill it is arranged, without fault in line or pigment-amber, gold, copper, rose, crimson, scarlet, green and the neutral sands making up altogether one of the most engaging pictures of all the year.

"Come away, even for a little while along the sweet-scented lanes and the quiet Lovers' paths of woodland." September begs her admirers, "to know in truth something of the glory of the colors, the wonder of the days that are here."

James will be our companion and the children, one of these days of young cattle" pasturing here or there on the fields of the farms; by a woods trail maybe we shall walk along the old hills. But it will be to, "come where our loves lie dreaming", loves of the season now here.

This week brought the heat of the threshing to this family and helpers, an activity to be continued into the week yet unborn. Sheaves we saw of it, loaded and empty grain-wagons; we heard the thresher sing an old song and saw the granary of this place fill with

ELLEN'S DIARY

by an Island Farmer's Wife

So another week has told the tale of its days! It has been one of the largest of the fields, the increase of the spring seeding. And remembered again. "He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities" imperfect mostly erring folks that humans are.

Summer—we loved her. Autumn too we enjoy. The Island poet, Mr. Campbell, in verses from "The Masterpiece" describes nicely the season:

"The Autumn's priceless red and gold— Adorn each field and hill: Her fiery colors fiercely burn Beside each tree-fringed rill. Each silhouette against the sky, Is framed by clouds in passing by. The Artist paints with changeless Whilst there His colors blend: His masterpiece unfolds to all! His wonders never end. Each leaf—each branch—each partent tree. Shouts out to God! in eulogy."

Public Phones

Public telephones sometimes make people wonder whether we are getting contagion along with communication. Since it is impossible to carry our own private telephone around with us, we must use those that are available to all. Many people have thought that there might be a possibility of picking up some type of infection or disease by the use of public phones.

A Scientific Test
Recently, a fairly large group of telephones, in a scientific study, were given careful bacteriological examinations to see if they could transmit diseases from one person to another. One of the diseases thought to be transmitted in this way was

Turn Hungarian Goulash Into A Real Food Picture

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN

"HERE we are, Madame," said the Chef, as we entered the restaurant. "My friend Imry is the Chef here. He came originally from Budapest."

"Let's see how they serve Hungarian goulash, Chef. I wonder what meat they will use."

Choice of Meats

"Veal, or sections of chicken or turkey are good in a goulash; but probably tonight he will use the lean grass-fed beef that is so plentiful and inexpensive."

The waiter brought the goulash to the table, with a flourish removed the silver cover from the low oblong casserole, and presented it for approval.

Bubbling Hot

It was bubbling hot, the food arranged in three sections. In the center was a layer of beef cut in bite-sized pieces highlighted by a little thin gravy. On each side were layers of buttered noodles; and separating these from the meat were "stripes" of green peas punctuated by pimento dots.

"A veritable food picture, Chef. Yet it's made from inexpensive beef and vegetables, and no more work to arrange than when food is just sprawled on the platter."

MONDAY'S DINNER

Melon Slices
Noodles
Celeried Coleslaw
Coddled Apples with Whipped Topping
Coffee
Tea
Milk

Beef Goulash: Cut 3 lbs. stewing beef in serving-sized portions. Melt the beef fat in a heavy saucepan. Add 3 lbs. chopped peeled onions (which is 1 lb. to each lb of meat), 1 minced peeled section garlic and the meat. Slow-fry until lightly browned.

Add 1 tbs. paprika, 1/2 tsp. thyme, 1 1/2 tsp. salt, 2 c. hot water and 1 c. tomato juice. Cover, and simmer or bake 2 1/2 hrs. or until the meat is fork-tender. Most of the liquid will have evaporated. Make gravy with any remaining in the pan.

Coddled Apples: "Coddled" is an old-fashioned term that means very "gentle" cooking. For this dish, the apples should be medium-sized and rosy red. Wash, but do not core or peel. Better cook 12 or enough for two meals.

First make a syrup in a large deep frying pan by boiling together for 5 min. 4 c. water, 1 1/2 c. sugar, and the peel of a sliced 1/2 orange. Add the apples. Simmer 50 min., or until fork-tender. Turn often so they will cook evenly and not burn.

When tender, transfer to a serving dish. Boil the syrup until thick and dark red. Remove the orange rind. Pour over the apples. When cold, the syrup forms a jelly glaze. Serve plain, with whipped cream, or soft cooked custard.

Trick of the Chef
Season coleslaw with celery seed first toasted in the oven.
