THE NEW ENGLAND MAID WITH NO APPETITE.

Rebecca Dainty was a maid whose summers no one knew. Though she for fifteen years had said that she was thirty-two, And, though she never felt real smart, folks called her rather bright. And while she had a good, kind heart, she had no appetite.

She always came to breakfast late and ne'er forgot her sigh. First she would pass her little plate and try a piece of pie. Next she would cast her eyes around the table left and right. To see if something could be found to tempt her appetite.

If on the table beans were found, to eat some she would try. And then of lamb chops spoil a pound, nor pass the codfish by. A piece or two of hot corn bread was always her delight. Although, poor thing, she always said she had no appetite!

She next would try a chicken's leg and then a piece of wing. Next she would eat a soft boiled egg and then most anything. She always wanted something light when first she started in. But how she coaxed her appetite would make an ostrich grin. —Thomas F. Porter in New York Sun.

Quite the Thing.

"James, bring me some clean linen."
"Alas, sir, you have none! The laundryman refuses to hand over until he is given the money for that last batch."
"Well, why don't you give him the money?"
"There isn't a farthing in the house, sir."

"Well, well! Am I broke?"
"Yes, sir, absolutely."
"Dear me! I suppose I had better get up and see about it. Bring me my suit, James."

"Gone, sir. Everything pawned except the old frayed frock coat you were going to give the housekeeper."

"Great heavens! I'll stay in bed all day first! Get me something to eat, anyhow."
"There's nothing in the house, sir, and the restaurant keeper refuses to let us have anything more without cash."

"By Jove! Nothing to wear but dirty linen and a frayed frock coat, nothing to eat and no money! Good gracious! I can never look my friends in the face again!"

"Why, certainly you can, sir, and out a greater dash than ever before," urged the faithful James. "Tell 'em you are a Bohemian and are doing this in obedience to the artistic instinct." —Strand Magazine.

Sincerity.

In life sincerity is the sure touchstone of character. The good and valuable man is he who strives to realize day by day his own sincere conceptions of true manhood.

Thousands are struggling to exhibit what some one else admires to reach the popular standard, to be or appear to be respectable and honorable, but few make it their aim to live thoroughly up to their own individual convictions of what is right and good.

Carlyle well says: "At all turns a man who will do faithfully needs to believe firmly. If he have to ask at every turn the world's suffrage, if he cannot dispense with the world's suffrage and make his own suffrage serve, he is a poor eye servant, and the work committed to him will be misdone." —New York Ledger.

Deadly Odd Number.

"Are you superstitious about the number 13?"
"That's what! I used to earn $13 a week, and now I get only $10." —Detroit Free Press.

They're Too Real.

"I used to have a great relish for practical jokes."
"Don't you still enjoy them?"
"No, not since I'm married." —Chicago Record.

Funny Incident on a Bridal Trip.

A young married couple took a late train for Washington, intending to spend their honeymoon in rambling through the corridors of the capitol, Congressional library and other public buildings. The porter was awakening passengers at an unusually early hour that morning, and long before the train reached Baltimore he had them up. The groom told his bride that he would leave his coat and hat and retire to the smoking compartment of the train. He went out and met a friend, who asked him back into another car in order that he might meet a friend of his. Soon the conductor began making his rounds and taking up tickets. The young bride referred him to the smoking apartment, where, she said, her husband would be found. A moment later the conductor returned and informed her politely that the bridegroom was not to be found. The other passengers were startled by a loud shriek.

"My husband! Oh, my husband!"
"Don't be alarmed, madam," said the conductor reassuringly. "Nothing has happened to your husband. He is probably in Baltimore. We dropped two sleepers at that point." And that was why friends of the young couple who went to the station in this city to meet them saw only the bride clinging to an overcoat and a silk hat and wailing, "This is all there is left of him!" —Washington Post.

Salty.

Grant Hamilton, associate editor on Judge, was in the days of his youth an Ohio boy. It was then that he worked in a grocery store, measured beans and corn and potatoes and such things as those. One day a crabbed old fellow with whom Hamilton was acquainted entered the store and inquired for some mackerel. In obedience to the request young Hamilton ran his arm deep down in the barrel and, holding up a fish to the gaze of the prospective purchaser, said:

"How will this one suit you, sir?"
"Well, my boy," iterated the gentleman as he touched the tip of his finger to the fish, "this tastes awfully salty."

"My dear sir," said Hamilton, "if you had been in that brine as long as that fish you'd be salty too." And when the old fellow told the proprietor of the store of Hamilton's remark the prospective successor of the lamented Bernhard Gillam was told to seek another job. —New Orleans Times-Democrat.
