Books of communist doctrine heavily subsidized — are sold for but a few cents in India and other Eastern countries, an average of 22-500,000 copies distributed per year.

The Holy Scriptures are subsidized to sell at a price people can pay, an average of 21,700,000 copies distributed per year through the efforts of all the Bible Societies.

You can help today!

Timely Notes On Fur Farming

At the Oslo, Norway, sale last week a total of 10,000 platinum mink was 96 per cent sold with males averaging $20.50 and a top of $27.50 and females $17 with top of $18. An offering of 20,000 pastels was 90 per cent sold, males averaging $29 and females $18.50. Top price for males was $40, females $22, United States and Italian buyers were the major factors in the mink sale. Continuing news of the Oslo sale which ended on January 11, shows that 3,600 blue fox was 84 per cent sold at prices of $34.22; 50,000 standard ranch mink was 94 per cent sold, males averaging $19.74, females $13; 10,000 platinum mink was 96 per cent sold with males averaging $29.30 and females $13.10; 20,000 pastels were 95 per cent sold, males averaging $26.90, females $18.25; 11,000 blue fox was 85 per cent sold averaging $25.34; 6,000 silver fox was 78 per cent sold averaging $14.42. This is the best news we have seen on silver fox for the past three years!

At Hudson's Bay Company's sale in Montreal last week Canada mink for females were $40 the Canada Mink Breeder's Association was reported 83 per cent sold; unlabelled goods sold 82 per cent; dark ranch mink from independent shippers sold at prices with 74 per cent disposal for commercial type skins. 100 per cent sales and keen competition between United States, European and Canadian buyers, Silverblus were reported 80 per cent sold. EMBA royal pastels reached a top of $49 for Stewart males and $26.50 for females; regular pastels and females were $40 and $21.50 respectively. Highest prices for silverblus was $34.50 for Breath of Spring males and $16.50 for females. A sale feature was the very considerable demand by both American and European buyers for commercial type skins. EMBA goods in this sale were auctioned for account of Canadian Mink Breeders.

At last week's New York auction sale dressed royal pastels mink were holding firm to December levels. Some 52,000 royal pastels and royal pastel types were offered and 98 per cent sold. Top price for males was $59 and females hit $29.50.

This morning in Montreal the Canadian Fur Auction Sales Co. will offer 9,000 standard silver, platinum, pearl platinum and white marked fox pelts. It will be interesting to see how these are doing in the Canadian market and whether they will average as much as the recent sale in Oslo as shown above. On the previous Wednesday, Thursday and Friday large quantities of Alaska seal, beaver, over, mink of various varieties, muskrat, ermine and other furs will be auctioned.

Sam Gottesfeld, leading feature writer on furs for Women's Wear Daily, has the following good news in a late issue: "The raw American fur market has been booming in the past six weeks and is only just showing signs of levelling off. An interesting domestic, Canadian and European market has elevated mink prices up to 40 per cent above a year ago; muskrat up to 35 per cent; beaver up to 15 per cent higher, sheared raccoon up to 10 per cent higher. In its own way the raw fur market has matched the recent advances in the stock market and interestingly the decline in the stock market last week is said to have caused a halt to further rise in fur prices. Raw fur prices have not eased off but are holding very firm, according to dealers and brokers. Undoubtedly a diminished raw fur crop this season has contributed to the inflation in prices but that is a disagreement as to just how much influence supply has exerted on prices. Mr. Gottesfeld ends with the following: It is estimated that some $40 to $50 million has already been invested in ranching mink by dealers and manufacturers in New York since the beginning of this pelting season while no more than one-tenth has been invested in other kinds of fur.

Clarence W. Storey of the Storey Fur Farm, Oregon, conducts a mink rancher's almanac in the National Fur News and in it he gives helpful advice, and we quote: "I feel it is too bad that some ranchers think they have to have several thousand females to be in the mink business. Of course every rancher has a right to raise as many as he pleases but if we have an over-production of mink pelts it will hurt us all and the industry as a whole. It is my belief that some of the most profitable mink ranchers are those who have from 500 to 800 females. The owner has a much better chance to observe

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan
SENSE OF INSECURITY OFTEN SOWS PREJUDICE

It is a commonplace observation that there is a great difference between the young of animals and the human infant. While both are initially helpless, the animal very soon begins to cope with its environment. Babies, on the other hand, are defenseless for a long time.

A child learns slowly who his mother is, and who his father is, by what they do for him; and learns by exploration, by trial and effect, to fear some things. A child learns, and does not know by instinct, what is good and bad to eat, who are his friends and who are not.

Long experience has shown us that tensions between the parents, disagreements on fundamental issues, or frequently expressed dissatisfaction with the family's social status, have deep and sometimes tragic effects on children.

Instead of learning love, children can learn fear and distrust from their parents; they do not have to understand what is being talked about, or argued about, to know with what feelings it is being discussed.

SENSE OF INSECURITY
On a much wider scale, there is another effect of this initial human helplessness. This is the widespread sense of insecurity, of which we have so many evidences today. No doubt this has always existed, but various conditions in our own time certainly make us more conscious of it.

This sense of insecurity makes us innately hostile to anything strange or different. Innately, because while we are aware of our hostility, we are hardly at all aware of its motivation; and if we examine ourselves honestly, we are forced to admit that there is no motivation at all in most cases; we dislike things just because they are different.

This is made much clearer by some examples. The matter of language, for instance: We feel suspicious if people in our presence talk a language that we do not understand.

This can sometimes be explained quite rationally; but it is much more difficult to account for the feeling of distrust which seizes us when we hear someone speaking with a different pronunciation from our own. We feel that there is something "wrong" with the way they speak; the "right" way, of course, is our own way.

MANNERS VARY
Similar to this is our feeling about manners. Why do we feel that it is "better" to keep the fork, or not to keep it, in the left hand? Why is it very bad to eat meat with one's fingers, as a great many other nations do? Only because their way is not our way, and we must be right.

On this level, the feeling of insecurity, though real enough, is not really dangerous, because as soon as what seems different to us becomes familiar, we no longer object to it.

STEAD'S PHARMACY
WILL BE OPEN SUNDAY
From 10 A.M. to 9 P.M.
DIAL 4131
We Deliver

Over many different traditions. In both the past and the present we stand between England and the United States, drawing from both; and our future as a nation must inevitably be affected by the contact of our own culture and that of French Canada — not to mention the different national heritages brought to this country by New Canadians from Europe.

Canadians simply cannot afford to be anti-English or anti-American; they cannot afford to think of English or of French, as the only Canadian language.

The almost unconscious feeling of insecurity, the fear of being "swallowed up," is not to be overcome by closing our borders or our minds to outsiders. The wider our embrace of different traditions and different points of view, the richer will be our future; not just in natural resources, but in a way of living based on sound values.
