MARY HAWORTH

She Couldn't Love Him Yet Agreed To Marriage

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: If only somebody had counselled me as wisely, 35 years ago, as you counselled a girl recently, my life might have been different and happier. I refer to the girl, 23, going steady with a man whom she did not love but fears to lose, as possibly her one chance at marriage. At 22, I made such a marriage trying to assure myself that the man's fault would vanish once he was out from under his fanatical old mother's thumb. Oddly, it never occurred to me that if he had any guts he wouldn't be under her thumb! Coming from a non-drinking household I told myself he was a prize because he didn't drink except, as he phrased it, "to keep from being rude in another's house." He didn't dance and felt morally a cut above people who did. So I, a former wallflower at high school dances, consoled myself that I would no longer have to compete on the dance floor. Yet no matter how much of a sales talk I gave myself, I could not love him, and I would have married almost anyone else, given the chance. Perhaps I should be grateful, however, that he added the title "Mrs." to my signature as that seems to be the insignia whereby a woman's feminine worth is certified, regardless of how much of a mess her marriage is, or was. The insignia says "She got her man."

ELLEN'S DIARY

Winter's Grasp Loosens With Advent Of March

By this, the thought comes, another leaf on the new year's calendar has been turned, and the days of the March-month we meet on the new page. "We'll get the March storms" a farmer visiting us this evening remarked. "We're not 'out of the woods' then. We may expect those." "And they can catch up on one so suddenly!" his wife offered. "Yes, from a clear sky and in no time a regular blizzard can develop," we agreed. "When you're away on a March day - or night, and see the snowflakes begin to fall - that's his time to put on your hat and head for home!" James smiled. "If visiting" the other farmer said with a chuckle, "don't even wait for a cup of tea. Get on the road!" "We've been at the mud-digging down the River, away from the world, it seemed, when a sudden March flurry would blow. And it wasn't the nicest place to be" James remembered. "Well, there's this to it" the wife said, "with the coming of March, winter's back is pretty well broken - the cold days and real storms are pretty well in the past." "March brings the spring-time" James grinned happily at the thought. "Yes, along with St. Patrick's Day, the spring - look is there" the visiting farmer nodded. And even at the name, we could fancy winter's grasp loosens, could see and hear again the "rippling rills" little and larger, that at Alderlea here against a hillside, are a part of our spring scenes, and the stream in the deep of the valley below in a red and troubled flow. Today was of winter, however. The weather seasonal. A bit cool but pleasant. A horse and sleigh was used at the farm's haulings. Paddy the sizable and quite handsome animal, actually more of a bay than red. He is not at all burdened with the winter-work given him, and is tended as faithfully as if he were a caparisoned mount of one of the knights of old that ride so fetchingly through the children's medieval tales. We saw him follow the trail, which, along the snow winds in a thread of track up and off to far fields, horse, sleigh and driver, small seemingly against the wide expanse of winter-white, reaching away up the valley.

Six Organization Tips Make Cooking Creative

BY IDA BAILEY ALLEN "Perhaps you think you can't spend any more time preparing meals than you do now. But if you decide to beat the cost of feeding your family, you will have to cook a little more for many of the budgetwise foods need longer cooking than the "quick," "instant," or "miracle" foods require. Cooking "a little more" does not necessarily mean spending more time at it. Top-of-the-range or oven cookery "do themselves" when once started, while you do something else. The widespread belief that cooking is a chore is largely erroneous. Study the subject, experiment a bit, rearrange the kitchen for convenience instead of mere prettiness, and cooking can become a creative art.

1. Make a list of the basic foods you know will be needed for the week, putting each kind under its own heading to save shopping time.

2. Add the foods you would like to buy if possible.

3. Follow the weekly specials given in newspapers or over radio or television to check comparative prices.

4. Then with an open mind go food shopping in person. Be ready to buy alternate foods if those you have planned are too expensive.

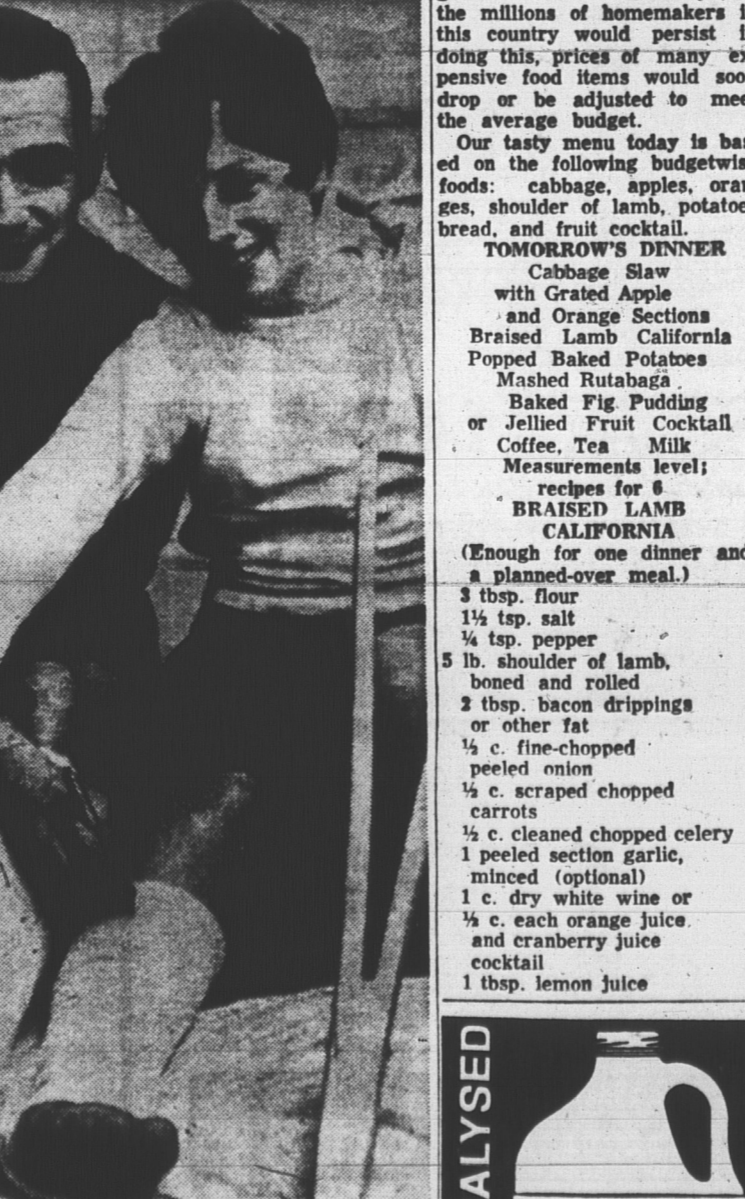

5. Read the labels on canned and packaged goods. Know what they contain; how many servings your money is buying. Don't be ashamed to ask questions.

6. Avoid all impulse buying. It is often these impulsive, unexpected, unplanned expenditures that throw the budget out of balance.

One Solution If a price is too high, consistently buy lower-priced foods with similar nutritive value. Use the suggestions and examples in this column as a guide. If even a minority of the millions of homemakers in this country would persist in doing this, prices of many expensive food items would soon drop or be adjusted to meet the average budget.

Our tasty menu today is based on the following budgetwise foods: cabbage, apples, oranges, shoulder of lamb, potatoes bread, and fruit cocktail.

TOMORROW'S DINNER
Cabbage Slaw with Grated Apple and Orange Sections
Braised Lamb California
Popped Baked Potatoes
Mashed Rutabaga
Baked Fig Pudding or Jellied Fruit Cocktail

3 tsp. flour
1 1/2 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. pepper
5 lb. shoulder of lamb, boned and rolled
2 tsp. bacon drippings or other fat
1/2 c. fine-chopped peeled onion
1/2 c. scraped chopped celery
1 peeled section garlic, minced (optional)

THAT'S THE BREAKS!

Both suffered skiing mishaps, breaking and spraining their ankles soon after they took to the slopes last Saturday. Tom suffered a broken bone and Ann chipped a bone and badly sprained her ankle. More than 450 New England skiers were hospitalized or visited the doctor during Saturday and Sunday. (AP Wirephoto)

Montrealer Is Preparing 'Haute Couture' Showings

By LENDA CRAWFORD MONTREAL (CP) - French-Canadian designer Marie Paule is launching a new project - a haute couture showing in the grand salon of her Victorian residence, followed by afternoon tea.

She says: "It's not for the restaurant clientele, or for the antique buyers. It's to bring women to old Montreal who might not otherwise visit a haute couture house. It's for their information and entertainment. The collection is not for sale."

And the 100-year-old building on Bonsecours Street was formerly a warehouse for storing beans, butter and dried fruit. The three-story building was bought and renovated by the designer three years ago.

The 60-foot grand salon is on the first floor, with Victorian antiques and paintings. Tea will be served in the dining room on the second floor, where there is a beautifully-furnished and spacious living room.

"We'll do it in a very old-fashioned way," Marie Paule said. The fashion show is to begin at 3 p.m. today and tickets are by reservation.

CLOTHES ARE NEW Only the setting is old-fashioned. The clothes reflect everything new in fashion. But they are classic enough not to look out of place in the elegant surroundings.

Marie Paule expects to create a new collection every three weeks or so "to catch up with style" and to keep up with the calendar.

The collection now ranges from a tailored lightweight camel dress, for daytime to a black dinner dress with cape.

"I will tell the ladies, 'wear your skirts as short as conscience permits,' because we are really in a period for short skirts," she said.

Most of the dresses were semi-fitted with A-line skirts. Some suits had straight skirts. One with an A-line skirt came in a spring favorite - check - and was cut on the bias.

Marie Paule hopes to show

At the meeting, held at the home of Mrs. Budd Williams, it was decided to send to the mail order houses for remnants.

Correspondence was read and discussed and the hospitality committee chosen for next month: Mrs. E.S. Buleigh, Mrs. L. A. Buleigh, Mrs. Ray Williams and Mrs. Burton Buleigh.

Refreshments were served by the hostess and her committee.
