

Parking

For Veale, parking enforcement is a big concern. He recognizes that people may be perturbed at paying for parking, but says to make a national comparison. In BC, parking can cost as much as $40 a month. Compared to such numbers, Veale feels a $50 parking pass is reasonable. In terms of parking chances, UPEI makes no attempts at a caste system. Students, faculty, and service providers all have the same chance of getting a spot. He reports that 95% of people regularly follow the guidelines, but there are always that 5% who refuse to. In their case, he says they simply take their chances.

Veale reports that despite popular misconceptions, parking concerns and complaints are passed along. Even in terms of appeals, the situation is reviewed and seen in the context of the whole parking situation. The goal is to keep the users of the university happy. Veale urges anyone who has constructive criticism or complaints to make use of the open door policy that the security building maintains.
