Hot Debate On Suez Turns The Clock Back To Munich

By ALAN HARVEY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON (CP) — One of the bristling side-issues in Britain's "great debate" on the Suez crisis turns the clock back some 20 years. Is this another Munich all over again?

Prime Minister Eden — credited with first using the word "appeasement" to denote a craven approach to great events — says there is no difference between Suez and Munich, between Egypt's Col. Nasser and Germany's Adolf Hitler.

Opposition Leader Hugh Gaitskell says the analogy is desperately false. He "begs" Eden to draw a life-and-death distinction.

CLEARLY DEFINED GAP

The opposing points of view were made crystal clear last week in the emergency House of Commons debate on Suez. At one point Eden quietly laid aside his notes, looked across at the Labor opposition and said earnestly he would like to finish on a personal note.

"Dictators are not deflected from their purpose because others affect to ignore it," he said. "We must not help to reproduce step by step the history of the '30s."

The (British) government is not prepared to embark on a policy of abject appeasement."

The pre-war period had a particular poignancy for Eden, who resigned as foreign secretary in February, 1938, in protest against the appeasement of the Axis powers.

BACK EDEN'S STAND

Conservative speakers echoed their leader's theme. "Whatever mistakes we made in the '30s, we have learned our lesson," said Maj. Tufton Beamish, member for a Sussex town.

Next day, Gaitskell sought to shatter the comparison. He said he understood the emotions felt about the pre-war situation, but the circumstances were different. In the '30s, Britain had been objecting to Germany's use of armed force against frontiers, and the "invasion" of territories, the Rhineland, Czechoslovakia and Austria.

"In Germany, we were dealing with a nation which we regarded as the strongest military power in Europe, if not in the world. The same not be said of Egypt."

Another difference, Gaitskell contended, was that then the League of Nations was largely "moribund." He might be optimistic but he thought the United Nations was far from moribund.

PAPER VIEWS DIFFER

Outside Parliament, the Munich argument also rages. In an article in the right-wing Sunday Express, Hugh Dundas says that the Labor opposition "waivers and quavers" before Nasser today just as the appeasers of the '30s quivered and quavered before Hitler and Mussolini.

The article by Dundas—headed "Must the Faint Hearts Always Triumph?" — follows one by James Cameron in The News Chronicle, a Liberal newspaper, which takes a completely different view.

Cameron says the parliamentary debate showed that many grown-up men are living in a historical context that vanished years ago. To equate Nasser with Hitler, he says, is to "equate sour grapes with cyanide."

How, asks Cameron, are Britons expected to compare Egypt, a nation of 20,000,000 poverty - stricken, ignorant dispossessed illiterate peasants, with a tradition of nothing but helotry and under - privilege, to a nation (Germany) of 80,000,000 disciplined, organized, sophisticated, heavily industrialized Europeans, with a continued history of conquest?"

TOOK PART IN ADVERTISING CLINIC SESSIONS

Summerside was well represented at the advertising clinic sessions conducted in Charlottetown Wednesday by Clyde Bedell for The Guardian. The Thomson Company Ltd., has arranged for Mr. Bedell to conduct such clinics in various cities across the country and judging from its reception here they should prove popular with advertisers.

Stresses Advertising As Economic & Social Force

CLYDE BEDELL, who addressed advertisers and advertising people in Charlottetown, yesterday, has a tremendous respect for the power of advertising as an economic and social force—despite the fact it is used indifferently by most merchants.

The standard of living in any country is bound to be low in which there is not free and aggressive selling, says Mr. Bedell.

But, he quickly adds, "All good selling is serving. "Advertising, he says, "is professional selling—multiplied."

Professional—because he believes anyone who sells either orally or in print should know all he can about his job, should work to the highest standards he can impose upon himself, and should work in the public interest as much as his own.

This means all selling should ne completely honest and should render first of all, a thorough-going service to the prospect. Thus, he says, it is not only uneconomical, it is also immoral to tap a prospect on the shoulder (figuratively) in type and say, "I want to talk to you about a dress" (or a fur coat, or a baby carriage, or a snow shovel, or whatever the case may be and then fail to tell the interesting and important things about that item the prospect has a right to be told if she (or he) is interested.

SERVES BEST

Mr. Bedell points out that the advertising that sells her best is that which serves her best by informing her most adequately, not only as to the make-up of the item, but also as to the benefits and good it can bring her.

He points out that a woman may look at a very long ad one day, perhaps for a refrigerator, and say, "Good Heavens! Who in the world would think of reading all that copy in any ad?" She is not interested in a refrigerator.

But two days later when her refrigerator breaks down and she and her husband agree that they will buy a new one, she will look at the same ad, read it and say, "This is the only store that has sense enough to tell me all the things I want to know when I read an ad."

Emergency Landing By U.S.A.F. Jet

The R. C. A. F. said Wednesday a U. S. A. F. Shooting Star jet trainer made an emergency landing at Summerside with its radio transmitter out of order, the airport radio beam out of order and only enough gasoline for five minutes flying left in the aircraft.

The aircraft was directed to the vicinity of the Summerside R.C.A.F. station by radar operators at the Chatham, N. B. base, and it found the airport after it came down below low clouds.

The plane was flying from Detroit to Torbay, Nfld., and was unable to land at fog-bound Nova Scotia and New Brunswick airports.

The Shooting Star can carry two men, but it was not known how many were aboard.

P. E. I. Has Something Different For Tourists, S'side Mayor Says

The Prince Edward Island has something a little different to offer as a tourist resort was emphasized yesterday at Summerlea Restaurant by His Worship Mayor W. A. Currie, as he and the Town Council of Summerside were hosts at luncheon to the delegates to the annual convention of the Canadian Tourist Association. He added that though facilities for tourists are developing slowly here, what has already been accomplished is excellent.

In welcoming the delegates to Prince County, Mayor Currie spoke for a time specifically to the Americans present. He compared Canada's present great industrial development with that of the United States 75 years ago and said that he is convinced that both countries will continue to advance in mutual co-operation for defence and in such ventures as the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Approximately 225 persons from across Canada and the United States attended the luncheon of Prince Edward Island seafood. Among those at the head table were Mayor and Mrs. Currie; W. Gordon Wood, acting president of the Canadian Tourist Association, and Mrs. Wood; Dr. Leo Dolan, director of the Dominion Travel Bureau; Dr. John Fisher; Senator Elsie Inman; J.W. MacNaught, M. P.; and Mrs. B. Earle MacDonald of Charlottetown. Mr. MacNaught, Dr. Dolan, and Dr. Fisher all spoke briefly.

Before luncheon the delegates were taken on a short tour of Summerside and gathered at Queen Elizabeth Park to hear the music of the Summerside Sea Cadet Band, under the direction of Mr. Gabriel Chaisson.

Son Of Former Islander On Second Antarctic Trip

After less than four months in which to warm up following an earlier trip to Antarctica, Dean Rankin, 19, son of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer W. Rankin of 15 Cherokee road, left from Boston, Mass., on Sunday aboard the icebreaker USS Glacier for a return trip to the South Polar regions. His father was born on Prince Edward Island. His grandmother, Mrs. Cora Reeves Rankin, 498 Union Street, Parkway, N.J. was born in Freetown, P.E.I.

On this second tour of duty in connection with the Navy's "Operation Deep Freeze, the sailor will be serving as a member of a stand-by ground crew for planes flying over the polar area from bases in New Zealand.

The planes will be carrying out observation work and also participating in the airdropping of a base at the South Pole as part of the United States' participation in the International Geophysical Year project.

A pipefitter in the Navy, the local man recently took his third class tests and expects to hear the results in November. He has one more year to serve, with his discharge scheduled for October, 1957.

During this second trip to Antarctica, Pipefitter Rankin will get a closer and more prolonged view of the frozen wastes of the area as a member of the ground crew. His first trip lasted about seven months, three of which were spent in Antarctica, and he got ashore fro mthe Glacier on several occasions then, helping to build the barracks for a base at which 95 men wintered-over during our past summer.

Rankin reported the lowest temperature recorded during his first stay was 20 below zero, with the average for the Antarctic "summer" (corresponding to our winter) being about zero.

He arrived back at Boston from the first trip last May and had been stationed there since while the Glacier was in drydock for repairs. The local man had been home to see his folks several times since then, including a visit last week-end before leaving on the second voyage South. He had a 20-day furlough in June.

On this second trip, the Glacier will proceed through the Panama Canal, stop at Valaparaiso, Chile, and then head South to drive as far as it can through the Antarctic ice before ground crews are despatched to set up plane bases.

The local sailor's parents said he expressed interest in getting back for further experiences in the polar region but also remarked that he could think of other places he would rather go for his final year of service. He expects to return from Antarctica next May.
