THE RIGHT FINESSE

Choosing the correct finesse from two or more opportunities for this play is not always as obvious as it may seem, judging from the performance of more players. In today's deal, as in the case described yesterday, declarer's short-sightedness in this respect cost a slam.

LONG SUFFERING STORIES

(By Thomas W. Burgess)

PETER SCOFFS

The truly wise are very slow to scoff at what they do not know. —Old Mother Nature.

Curiosity is in the long hind-foot of Peter Rabbit. Because of this they take him lipperty, lipperty, lip to all sorts of places where he has no business to be. This morning daylight found him on the hill back of Aunt Sally's Woodhouse Night Club. It was farther from the dear Old Briar Patch than he should have been at any time, and here it was broad daylight.

Peter had known for a long time that Bobby Coon and his family, and Jimmy Skunk and his family, and others of their kind had for a long time been going every night down to that woodhouse. They had worn little paths through the grass and Peter had seen those little paths. His long heels had itched to follow those little paths down to see just what they led to. But Peter is distrustful even though he is so full of curiosity. He had never quite dared follow one of those little paths down to Aunt Sally's house.

Very near where Peter was sitting looking down the hill was the home of Mother Chuck. She poked her head out. "Good morning, Peter," said she. "What are you doing way over here in broad daylight?"

"Just looking," said Peter lamely.

Mother Chuck came out, shook herself, sat up on her doorstep and washed her face and hands, then made ready to follow a little path down the hill to Aunt Sally's backdoor. "Where are you going?" asked Peter.

"I'm going to get my breakfast," replied Mother Chuck.

"Where?" persisted Peter.

"Down there," said Mother Chuck, nodding toward Aunt Sally's backdoor.

Just then the backdoor opened and Aunt Sally appeared. Peter grinned. "I guess you won't go down there for breakfast now," said he.

"Chucky! Chucky! Chucky!" called Aunt Sally. "Chucky! Chucky! Chucky!" There was wonderful sweetness in that voice. There was more than that, there was love.

"Watch me," said Mother Chuck. "Don't tell me you are going down there," cried Peter.

"I'm going in. I'm going down there to breakfast," replied Mother Chuck.

"You don't dare," scoffed Peter. "Perhaps you don't dare, but I do," replied Mother Chuck.

Mother Chuck started to go down the hill. Just then out of the bushes came Goldie, the handsome golden-coated daughter of

THERE OUGHT TO BE A LAW

By Fago's & Shortes

POP AND MOM HAVE TO USE STRONG-ARM STUFF TO GET BRATINELLA TO SWALLOW A SPOONFUL OF COUGH SYRUP.

I HAVE HER ARMS PINNED! QUICK! FORCE HER MOUTH OPEN AND POUR IT IN!

SAW! I DON'T WANT ANY MEDICINE! (I HATE MEDICINE!)

BUT LEAVE HER ALONE NEAR A MEDICINE CABINET!

HURRY, DOCTOR! SHE SWALLOWED A WHOLE BOTTLE OF HART TONG AND THERE'S HALF A TUBE OF TOOTH PASTE GONE!
