Chocolate Macaroons These are rich and terribly good—words I use with due deliberation. Buy one-half a pound of commercial almond paste (it's surprisingly inexpensive). Break it up on a large grater (if you haven't a rotary grater), put it in a bowl and add one egg white unbeaten—you will have eventually to get your hands into this—mix as well as you can. When it is pasty, work in gradually one cup of fruit sugar, add two squares of chocolate which you have melted over hot water, and lastly work in the unbeaten whites of two more eggs, one at a time. Beat the mixture thoroughly with the hand. Shape in small rounds, set them a little apart on a cookie sheet covered with waxed paper. Sprinkle each with granulated sugar. Bake in a moderate oven 15 minutes.
