New Wonders Possible From Nuclear Centre

By G. K. HODENFIELD

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — A black-and-white striped carrot as big as a watermelon? Maybe.

A quick, easy cure for the common cold? Perhaps.

A washday detergent as effective as those you see in the TV commercials? Difficult, but still possible.

All these wonders, and more, may spring from the nuclear science centre now in the final planning stages at Auburn University here.

Warren M. Andrews, who will direct the centre when it opens in the fall of 1963, won't flatly predict the development of exotic vegetables, miracle drugs or better-than-perfect detergents.

But he does not discount the possibilities, either.

"We are just entering the nuclear age," he said in an interview. "The possibilities are fantastic."

The Auburn centre will be unique. Other universities have concentrated on nuclear engineering and the production of power; the facilities here will be available to all interested departments on the campus.

The $1,000,000-plus centre will provide classrooms and laboratory space for Auburn's schools of agriculture, veterinary medicine, pharmacy, home economics, engineering, physics and chemistry.

Home economics isn't a field you ordinarily think of in connection with nuclear research. How does it get into the act?

"Nuclear science may turn up new and better ways to pasteurize and preserve food," Andrews said.

"Or suppose you want to test a new detergent. You can make dirt slightly radioactive, then rub into the material to be washed.

"After each washing you test the material with a radiation detector to see how much of the dirt remains. This testing now is done chemically, but it is neither as easy nor as accurate."

Agriculture is another field where research possibilities are endless, Andrews said.

If seeds are subjected to massive doses of radiation, for instance, "there is no telling what might sprout up. It's a haphazard, random process which might lead to a type of plant or flower we can't even imagine today."

Party Affiliation Kept Secret On Federal Ballot Papers

OTTAWA (CP) — In the federal election game, you are expected to know the players without benefit of a program.

Thus, when you retire into the seclusion of a polling booth to mark your ballot June 18, you will find that the ballot does not give the candidates' party affiliations.

And if you should ask an election official inside the polling station, he won't give you the information. The ballot lists candidates by name, address and occupation only.

The theory is that designating the political stripe of a candidate would detract from his independent position if elected to the House of Commons. It might also create difficulties where more than one candidate claims to represent a party.

There have been repeated moves over the years to have party affiliations listed on the ballot. But none of the measures made any progress against the opposition of both Liberal and Progressive Conservative governments.

The subject came up again at the 1960 sittings of the Commons committee on privileges and elections. The committee made wholesale changes in the Canada Elections Act but it refused to budge on the affiliation question.

Advocates of the change have said it would avoid confusion where there are two candidates with similar or identical names, and that it would help voters who do not know the name of the candidate running for the party they wish to support.

Only one official document showing political affiliations of candidates is prepared. It is for the guidance of armed services personnel voting away from home.

The bidding:

| East | South | West | North |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pass | 3♥ | Pass | Pass |
| Pass | | | |

Opening lead—king of clubs.

This hand features exceptional defensive play. South opened with a preemptive bid of three hearts after East had passed, and that became the final contract.

West led the king of clubs and then shifted to the nine of hearts, East playing low to protect his king. Declarer won with the ten and saw that there was no future in ruffing a club in dummy at this point. This would eventually bring his losers to a spade, a heart, two diamonds and a club.

So instead, he led a low spade and played the ten from dummy. He planned to finesse if a trump was returned and then establish dummy's spades by ruffing one of them.

If East, after winning the ten of spades with the king, had returned a trump, South's plan would have worked out and he would have finished the hand with eleven tricks.

But East realized that declarer was trying to set up the spades and decided to knock out dummy's entry. Accordingly, he returned the king of diamonds!

Declarer ducked in dummy, and East, having struck gold, continued with a diamond. West playing the jack. Declarer decided to duck in dummy again, and now West, on lead, came forth with the ace of clubs, forcing dummy to ruff.

This play was necessary to protect East's king of hearts. If West had returned a spade, a diamond or a heart, South would have wound up with nine tricks because the A-10 of diamonds that remained in dummy were by now both tricks.

But when West led the ace of clubs, South, having already lost four tricks, was forced to ruff in dummy, and he later lost a trump trick to go down one.

East's king of diamonds play was on the spectacular side, no doubt, but it was the kind of play a good defensive player, alert to what is going on, is forced to make. You don't sit around idly and make "safe" plays on the defense when the circumstances call for drastic action.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
