

Disappointment At Big Four Shelving Disarmament

OTTAWA (CP)—There is some disappointment here concerning the action taken by the Big Four at Geneva on disarmament.

The Big Four referred disarmament problems to the United Nations sub-committee on disarmament, which includes Canada along with Britain, the United States, France and Russia. The sub-committee is to resume meetings at New York Aug. 29.

This move was expected here but officials had hoped for something better.

Even before the "summit" meeting, officials here expressed the hope that the thorny disarmament issue could be dealt with on a higher plane than that of a UN sub-committee.

Their reasoning is that Russia has introduced political as well as technical issues into the sub-committee's discussions—the body met for three months in London last spring—and that such powers as Germany and Italy are not members of the sub-committee.

External Affairs Minister Pearson told the Commons Saturday: "One of the difficulties we have encountered in recent months while the sub-committee was meeting in London was a tendency on the part of the Soviet Union . . . to try to link up the two things, the political and technical aspects of disarmament."

"While not deprecating in any way the importance of this matter, I would, therefore, hesitate to agree that the forthcoming sub-committee meeting in New York on disarmament would be the best place to thresh out this question."

"Possibly a meeting of foreign ministers on the political level would be more appropriate for that purpose . . ."

Russia made some concessions during the London talks, especially on the prime problem of control and inspection, but coupled them with a proposal for dismantling of all military bases in foreign countries. This moved the issue into the political realm.

They say (1) that putting the auditorium on the Brennan property will mean that when children of the elementary school have occasion to use it, they will have to be taken across Summer Street by their teachers, and this through street has considerable traffic.

(2) There will of necessity be considerable travelling back and forth between the two schools, and the new high school will be farther away than it would be if it were placed on the softball grounds.

(3) The newly purchased Brennan property, with its beautiful trees, could be made into the beauty spot of Summerside if it remained uncluttered by buildings.

(4) Expansion of building, belonging to the same institution, usually takes place, if possible, all on the same side of the street for the sake of compactness.

(5) There would be lots of room left for softball and other sports activities on what would be left of Queen Elizabeth Park.

Let's Talk It Over

As the time draws near for breaking ground for the new high school and auditorium in Summerside, there is a feeling among a section of the ratepayers, apparently becoming more crystallized and more widespread as the days go by, that the Brennan property recently purchased by the town is not the proper site for the new buildings. These people feel that the high school and auditorium should be built on the softball diamond on the same side of Summer Street as the old school is. Without endorsing, or attempting to confute their arguments, we list some of them here and let our readers themselves form their own opinions as to their weakness of validity.

They say (1) that putting the auditorium on the Brennan property will mean that when children of the elementary school have occasion to use it, they will have to be taken across Summer Street by their teachers, and this through street has considerable traffic.

(2) There will of necessity be considerable travelling back and forth between the two schools, and the new high school will be farther away than it would be if it were placed on the softball grounds.

(3) The newly purchased Brennan property, with its beautiful trees, could be made into the beauty spot of Summerside if it remained uncluttered by buildings.

Russian Bested In Duel Of Smiles By Eisenhower

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
Nikita Khrushchev goes home from Geneva bested in the duel of smiles by President Eisenhower. That can make things difficult for the boss of the Soviet Communist party.

One result of the Geneva "summit" meeting can be to bring a step closer a new struggle for Soviet power.

In post-Stalin Moscow, along with the weakening of the dictatorship in its diffusion for errors in judgment, and the Khrushchev smile offensive seems to be turning out to be just that. Apparently impatient for results, Khrushchev was the exponent of the all-out offensive to break up Western unity in the shortest time possible, no matter what the immediate cost in the Soviet world position.

HOME EMPTY-HANDED
There was an obligation upon the Soviet boss to return home with something looking like tangible results, not only to justify himself to a Soviet people thirsting for peace, but to prove his case to his political opponents in the government, army and party.

Failure to do this promises to bolster the case of that party wing which seemed to regard the diplomatic victories sought by Khrushchev as jeopardizing the future of Communist party activities throughout the world.

The Khrushchev-Bulgann attempt to make the United States look bad at Geneva came a cropper. President Eisenhower took the offensive with a bold approach to international tensions. The Soviet side harped on the theme of "mutual trust." Eisenhower gave them both barrels: Both sides would lay their cards on the table, expose the blueprints of their armed forces and subject all this to further checking as a beginning toward peace. Eisenhower also challenged the Russian to put an end to iron curtains everywhere and permit free exchange of ideas and people.

PUT RUSSIA ON DEFENSIVE
The Eisenhower proposals electrified world opinion, put the Soviet side on the defensive and brought a Russian reaction which seemed a combination of dismay and indecision. Whatever party they could think up then was likely to seem inadequate. Meanwhile, the old Soviet stubbornness and inflexibility were coming to the fore again as shown in
