

Jim William's Cowboys Rounded Up In New York

J. R. WILLIAMS: He'd rather be a successful cowman.

(By NEA Service) NEW YORK—(NEA)—A panorama of the color and humor of the American West, as portrayed by one of the world's best known and best-loved cartoonists—J. R. Williams—is on display in the just-published book, "Cowboys Out Our Way" (Charles Scribner's Sons, $2).

Readers who have enjoyed Williams' "Out Our Way" cartoons on the comic page of The Guardian will find many of their favorites reproduced in this new collection. The book includes 192 of the cowboy drawings which have entertained millions of newspaper readers during the last 29 years. Jim Williams started drawing "Out Our Way" in 1922. His work now appears in more than 1000 daily and Sunday newspapers.

All of the famous Williams cowpuncher characters appear in this collection: Curly and Stuffy; Wes, the reformed tenderfoot; Big Ick; Sugar, the unpredictable cook; Soda, the pipe-smoking cowhand; and others. Nearly every page features the amazingly lifelike horses and cattle, drawn as only Jim Williams can draw them.

Says J. Frank Dobie, celebrated western authority and writer, and university professor, in the book's foreword: "The characters come out of two deeply seated realities in their creator: his own experience on the range and his dreams of a free life in the open. Over years of time Jim Williams has been living with these characters on their own spaces of mesa, mountain and canyon, with here and there a hole of alkalish water."

Dobie tells of the artist's background as a cowboy in the New Mexico and Arizona country. "He has cooked for cow outfits and put up with camp cooks in his own day. He has owned and operated a 45,000-acre ranch, doing his own part of the work. He was a cavalryman for three years in the days when cavalry meant horses."

Yet, says Dobie, "Jim Williams is a very diffident and humble man. He deprecates his own work with a modesty painful both to himself and his friends."

"Also, in his own words, he would rather have been a fairly successful cowman out in the bright sunlight of the days than the most successful cartoonist that ever lived." If giving his own shirt to any cowpuncher who came along would make a cowman successful, I imagine Jim Williams might have become the king of cattle kings.

Williams has a library well stocked with western books, but he also reads the best of literature, including poetry. Dobie reveals: "He likes to remember people and things that have appealed to him. That is one of the marks of a generous nature. I imagine that his continuing cartoons on 'The Worry Wart' and 'Why Mothers Get Gray' often trail back to the long, long thoughts, as well as to the delivements of his own boyhood. "The cartoons on the machine shop, dominated by 'The Bull of the Woods' go back to his work as a machinist. 'Born Thirty Years Too Soon' has carried millions of people back to times before the horseless carriage machined the world. He may spend a day searching for an idea that he can put in black and white in a fraction of an hour. To vast numbers of people he is a part of their daily bread."

"Cowboys 'Out Our Way' is the sixth book of 'Our Our War' cartoons to be published by Scribner's.

BRONN, Germany, April 4—(CP)—Several hundred Communist women demonstrated in front of the West German capitol building today, demanding "peace, bread for our children and lower prices." Police drove the women away. One was arrested.

RICHMOND, Surrey, England—(CP)—This town has decided to do away with street fire alarm boxes. Seventy of 98 calls recently proved false alarms.

BRISTOL, England—(CP)—Wolf whistles are the vogue in Bristol's museum and art gallery. Authorities say it is becoming a popular Sunday rendezvous for dating teen-agers.
