

Commission Will Examine Ontario Labor Legislation

TORONTO (CP) — A royal commission will be appointed to examine labor laws in Ontario. Injunctions in labor disputes will be among the subjects to get careful scrutiny.

Premier John Robarts told the legislature Friday he was not yet able to say who would head the commission or who would sit on it.

There have been demands that the law on injunctions in labor disputes be revised but Mr. Robarts said a royal commission would not confine itself to the study of injunctions.

He said that already several law students are conducting research throughout the province on injunctions in labor disputes asked for or granted.

"We want a complete factual assessment so we'll know what we are talking about," the premier said he didn't believe that a royal commission "should examine injunctions alone" but should study the whole field of labor law and assess the mechanics of industrial disputes.

Whatever is decided about injunctions will be in the interests of the public but the decision won't be easy. Mr. Robarts said there are varying opinions on labor-dispute injunctions and that government must first assess these views carefully before one position can be taken.

He indicated that if the legislature, which prorogued Friday, had been sitting a little longer he would be in a position to announce the royal commissioner or commissioners.

Mr. Robarts said there are varying opinions on labor-dispute injunctions and that government must first assess these views carefully before one position can be taken.

The spotlight was beamed on injunctions earlier this year in union-management disputes at both the Oshawa Times and the Tilco Plastics Co. plants at Peterborough.

In both cases injunctions were granted restricting the number of pickets allowed around the respective plants.

The Oshawa Times dispute was resolved when management and the American Newspaper Guild arrived at a compromise.

The members are France, West Germany, Britain, Belgium, Holland, Italy and Australia.

Two Years Given For Theft Of Cup

LONDON (AP) — Edward Retchley, 47-year-old longshoreman, was sentenced to two years in prison Friday for his part in the theft of the world soccer cup from an exhibition hall in March.

There were demonstrations at the plant even after an injunction was granted and the government watched the situation carefully but didn't interfere.

Several workers went on strike at the Tilco plant last December. In February there were picketing demonstrations protesting not only management's attitude to contract proposals but also the granting of an injunction restricting the number of pickets.

The demonstrations continued despite warnings from Attorney General Arthur Wishart that the law must be obeyed.

Mr. Wishart finally decided to initiate criminal contempt proceedings against 27 of the demonstrators and explained in the legislature that the law must be upheld regardless of views that may be wrong.

Charges against one of the accused were dropped. The other 26 were convicted and sentenced to jail terms of up to two months. One man's sentence was suspended because he was ill.

European Space Alliance Agrees On 1970 Satellite

PARIS (Reuters) — The seven-nation European Space Alliance reached a provisional agreement Thursday night on launching a satellite in 1970 from an equatorial site in French Guiana.

Ministers of the member states of the European Launcher Development Organization (ELDO) met here Thursday to make a final decision on the launching site today as part of a package deal in which Britain agrees to remain in the organization with a reduced financial commitment. The August 11 agreement was reached after a final Thursday night session in which the seven-nation alliance agreed to launch a satellite in 1970 from an equatorial site in French Guiana. Sources said after the two-day conference opened Thursday that because French Guiana is much closer to Europe than Darwin, shipment problems would be easier and flight hours shorter. Scientific Affairs Minister Alain Peyrefitte of France told reporters France insists on having the site built in French Guiana because French delegates feel it offers the best technical conditions. The meeting follows an emergency session here last month which worked out a compromise formula to avert a British threat to quit over spiraling costs. Delegates discussed Thursday a coding to the ELDO program and arranged talks on the distribution of expenses and the costs of the launching site. Britain was reported willing to accept last month's formula, cutting its contribution to 27 per cent from just under 40 per cent of the program's total cost, which has doubled to £158,000,000 ($474,000,000) since 1962.

Examination Charges Laid

HALIFAX (CP) — Four charges have been laid by RCMP against a 24-year-old suburban Spryfield man in connection with alleged irregularities during provincial high school examinations last month.

A summons has been issued for the appearance of Robert Kenneth Edwards in city police court but police said today he has not yet been served.

Edwards was charged July 6 with two counts of theft under $50 and two counts of unlawfully obtaining documents for fraudulent purposes.

Grade 11 and 12 students in the city were required to sign two statements this year before writing examinations. They were required to say they had not cheated or seen advance copies of the examinations papers. Normally students are only obliged to sign a statement saying they have not cheated.

Space Efforts To Be Boosted

PARIS (Reuters) — Europe's space organization decided Friday night to boost its communications satellite program so as to be on a level with the United States and the Soviet Union.

Ministers of the seven-country European Launcher Development Organization decided to overhaul their current three-stage rocket program and add two more stages to provide a launching vehicle for their first
