FEDERATION NEWSLETTER

Heavy Mechanization Has Affected Farms

By J. LINCOLN DEWAR of the most significant dates in Aug. 4, 1914 was probably one recorded history. On that day

Across the Island
High Price Lobsters Since Were Fertilizer

By NEIL A. MATHESON
FREDERICKSBURG EDITOR
(Beginning next week this column will appear on Thursday instead of Fridays as in the past. The change in days will be in effect for a trial period which may become permanent.)

THE WESTERN Prince area is known as the most concentrated spot of poaching lobsters in the province, but I talked to veteran fishermen there on my last trip to the area of North Cape, and was told emphatically, "lobsters would never be pulled out if fishermen didn't take the poisoned lobster," and that's the female that is covered with eggs.

Many of these men have been poaching lobsters, or fishing out of season so long it's become a way of life. I talked for several hours with Joe MacLennan, a fisherman who fished more than a half century before he retired. And, I gathered, he poached for almost 20 years.

"I WAS on the patrol boat," he told me, and that must have been 1930-35, "I didn't want to be a fisherman, but I never caught any poachers. 'I didn't want to,' he told me, though he did and frightened many of them. Joe's partner on the patrol had suggested several months they should catch the men they chased. But Mr. MacLennan replied, "we'll be fishermen again some day when we've got to live with those fellows."

THEY told me I'm stressing here, though, is that those people don't believe they are damaging the industry by fishing out of season, and they've been doing it so long many of them know no other way to live.

Many Lobster Tales Heard
THEY ARE ordinary human beings like you and me, friendly, neighbourly, kind and generous as I've found in my visits with them. They're not the outlaws type as some people seem to believe.

I heard many tales of lobster fishing, some of them dating back for almost a century. Joe's brother, Jim MacLennan, landed 110,000 lobsters in one season back in the days when the tasty shell fish were bought by the unit, not the pound, and the price was high. It was long ago and the distance of the years could have added to the size of the tale. But I was told by William MacLeod's wife in Tignish that her husband had taken 50,000 in a season. She recalls that he landed two loads on a single day once.

That name Will MacLeod kept cropping up in many of the conversations I had with older fishermen in the area. Apparently, he was one of the best, known fishermen of his day. THE SEASIDE residents gathered lobsters once and piled the bodies on the land for fertilizer, several people told me. And that's a change from the luxury product status of today. That was before the days when the lobsters became marketable, but I couldn't pin down the date of their first five men the date, with a reasonable degree of proof of its occurrence. I shall appreciate it.

50 year ago World War One got underway and continued for slightly over four years. At the end of the conflict a slight inkling was being given of the possibilities of the machine age in a military war. Tanks, aeroplanes, poison gas and machine guns were making their appearance. The intervening 50 years have seen the Western World take up mechanization on a big way. Agriculture has replaced the horse with the tractor, the wagon with the automobile, the sense with electricity, the binder with the combine and a host of farm machines to replace the 1914 laborer.

The farm home has acquired conveniences that weren't available even to the very well off in 1914. While the world is still not a happily adjusted place, there has nevertheless been great improvements in a great many things. Life is certainly richer and fuller.

On a more bucolic note we would like that Aug. 4, 1964 was the biggest hay making day of the entire season. The weather on the late side but cool weather has kept the hay from becoming too dry and the quality feed is still being made. For those who wish to have some hay of quite special quality we suggest they consider these pastures which have grown up, there is to be found fodder of quite superior quality. Another point that needs to be noted is that at this time of the year hay makes very quickly and shouldn't be exposed any longer than necessary.

INTEREST CHARGES
The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has been concerned with the National Dairyman's Association of England and Wales, an organization of industry producers and it is hoped to have her meet persons in that branch of the Island industry.

FREIGHT ASSISTANCE
The Federation of Agriculture in the Maritime provinces has advised the Hon. Maurice Sauve that proposed changes in the Freight Assistance Policy on Western grain will create hardships with respect to the Maritimes.

An analysis of the proposals show that P.E.I. and N.B. will receive $1.50 per ton less and N.S. $1.00 per ton less assistance than previously. In addition it would appear that the grain areas will develop between areas in this province.

CATTLE PRICES
July always seem to produce a more or less characteristic pattern in cattle prices. For a start in the month there will be rather vague suggestions that cattle prices will not hold up and the cattlemen should be getting themselves mentally adjusted for a reaction in the near future.

DAILY QUEEN
The British Dairy Queen, Miss Christine Ann Hewitt together with her companion, Miss Elizabeth Dunworth will arrive in the province on Sunday, Sept. 13 and leave on Sept. 17.
