QUESTION:

What is your opinion on the petition to impeach Tracey Arsenault?

I haven't signed it and if I had the chance I don't think I would. She's got responsibility to administration and students. In a situation especially like this, it's hard to know, both sides are equally important and you can't please everyone. It has been blown way out of proportion, and I think it's off topic. She didn't have all the facts, if it turned out not to be true she would have been accused of spreading rumours.

The first petition was a farce because nobody know exactly what they were signing. I mean I signed it and I didn't know what I was signing. The present petition was O.K. and I signed it because as it was explained to me Tracey had knowledge of the incident long before she told anyone else and she probably should have told the student body before all the rumours started. On TV she said there wasn't much concern but at least two students expressed concern to Tracey.

I think there's more to it than just being part of this rape scandal. The student body wants to use this rape scandal as an excuse to get rid of her because of things she may have done in the past.

Tina

I don't agree with it. It was a very confusing situation and none of the facts were really present for every one to see and then with all the media attention it was hard for her to come up with a statement so fast, and people are too hard on her

Kim Petrie

I don't think she should be hung out to dry for one mistake. It just seemed to be over done and besides the facts are not clear and we are not aware of the real story yet.

Jane Hughes

She has the interest of the administration and not the students at heart. I don't think she knew more than any one else. U.P.E.I. student body is a very conformist and in fact she represents that. It's not her fault that men rape with impunity in this society.
