ELLEN'S DIARY

To Sing Before Seven Is Tears Before Eleven

James stirred on his pillow this morning, roused, and lay still. "Listen, Ellen" he said presently, "isn't it nothing short of marvellous to hear that again!"

The birds were into their chorals.

"After the winter's quiet" we added.

"There's no mistake, this is one grand time of year. But" he smiled across at us, "it's not a season to be lying late in bed!"

The old clock on the shelf in the kitchen below, struck an hour. "There" he said throwing back the old posied quilt, "we'd best get now to our day."

Promising the small shower that came later, the day was. Lightly cloudy, yet it was a mild wind that blew.

There was no sunbeam in the fresh of the water we put in the porridge pot over the fire, but when shortly we stirred in the meal, we hummed along with a radio tune.

A favorite program was coming in then, one which soon would report on the weather ahead, an item always of much moment to folks of the farm. But before it, nice selections of music were being aired, with the announcer chatting in a neighborly fashion, between the songs. He talked of this and that; of the temperatures obtaining here and there, of the trend of the weather. It might be to find the sun rising, or to see a pretty morning mist away over on the hills — Sometimes it is to see the smokes rise from the chimneys of the town below, or perhaps to tell of some early passer-by; or to speak of the birds seen from his window: starlings on a wire, a robin on a lawn, or maybe it is to note only the budding of a tree; simple homely things, but friendly and cheerful to start away one's day. And "Do you remember this one?" he will query with a chuckle of some mellow song to follow.

So because we have always found the measured beat of a tune intriguing we sometimes, even unwittingly sing along a bit of some familiar song as we prepare breakfast.

The porridge was bubbling in tiny whirls when Mack came by. We saw him glance at the clock and grin.

"Hey" he exclaimed, "you shouldn't sing!"

"There's no law against it, when we're alone in the kitchen" we chuckled.

"Oh, it's not that — but did you notice the time?" he smiled. "Don't you know that 'If you sing before seven, you'll cry before eleven'? And you have to allow too for Summer time."

"There won't be much time this morning for crying" James observed, coming in then to breakfast, "Any more lambs?" he inquired.

"A pair" Mack replied — "And what's ahead for today?"

"Oh we'll have to watch out for more lambs. And we should by rights get some of that wood sawed. We can't stop the cropping to saw wood! And I wouldn't say that we aren't going to have —"

"—that last litter in the piggery today?" Mack querried.

"Seems as though it's going to be busy on the home-front today" we offered. Busy — yet fortunately without sign of tears, other than those Peter can muster up over some young frustration.

"Tomorrow" James, in from the night, comments not without some surprise, "will see the turn of the month."

"The May-month" we sigh.

Until tomorrow — — Diary— Good-night.....

Progress Noted In Unitarian Service Committee Projects

Since its beginning in Charlottetown four years ago, the P.E.I. branch of the Unitarian Service Committee has concentrated on helping the needy, especially needy children, abroad.

Under the supervision of the president, Mrs. Fred Osborne, work is carried on weekly in cleaning, mending and packing of clothing for overseas. The clothing is received from centers throughout the Island at headquarters located in room 12 of the Dominion Building in Charlottetown.

The local branch recently received a letter from the founder and director of the USC, Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova now on her world tour for the organization. Dr. Hitschmanova will make her annual visit to the province in the early fall.

Her letter told of several projects being carried on by the USC.

In a concentrated fight to stamp out TB in the city of Mokpo, Korea, a medical team sponsored by the USC is in the process of testing 4,300 primary school children. Over 3,000 orphans have been tested since March, 1962 in the TB control program. Destitute orphans in this country receive heelless stockings from this Canadian organization, and to add a note of color, 200 Dutch tulips have been planted on the grounds of the TB children's Hospital in Mokpo.

In India, the letter reported, the committee sponsors literacy and health courses in some of the most isolated villages. Three hundred million people in India can neither read nor write, and have little knowledge of basic hygiene.

At a children's home in Hong Kong 80 tots are sponsored by the USC and have Canadian foster parents. The orphanage has 300 or more children.

The national headquarters of the USC has been moved to 63 Sparks St., Ottawa.
