Newfoundland Farm Economy Has Grown To Be 'Profitable'

ST. JOHN'S (CP)—In the 10 years since Confederation Newfoundland has hurdled some inborn obstacles to establish a sound and growing farm economy.

"Farming, as a commercial enterprise, has now become a profitable business," says Mines and Resources Minister W. J. Keough, whose department looks after agricultural matters. Newfoundland is the only province in Canada without an agriculture minister or autonomous department. But that hasn't hindered the industry's growth.

"Phenomenal progress" has been achieved, Mr. Keough said in a recent radio speech. In 1949 Confederation caught the province with small farms lacking modern equipment, which resulted in inefficient production. Six years later, with the government just starting to implement recommendations of a royal commission, the value of farms, livestock and equipment totalled $22,000,000.

Today Mr. Keough estimates capital investment to be between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000. Production last year was worth $9,500,000 before it reached the retailers.

While Newfoundland still lags behind the other Atlantic province in agricultural development, it has made impressive stride—despite difficulties ranging from poor farm land to sudden changes made necessary by Confederation.

Until 1949 Newfoundland farmers were protected from outside competition by low rail tariffs and import duties. Then, says Mr. Keough, "not only did the farmer lose the protective import duties and low rail tariffs, he was subjected immediately to brisk competition for his traditional markets from producers in the Maritimes and other parts of Canada."

LAND CLEARED

Two things were necessary to put provincial farmers back on their feet—the clearing of more land and the modernizing of farms. Since 1949, 9,000 acres of land have been cleared. A farm loan board created in 1953 has extended $600,000 in credit.

Bogland reclamation projects have yielded 900 new acres of land have been cleared. A farm loan board created in 1953 has extended $600,000 in credit.

Bogland reclamation projects have yielded 900 new acres of land, 500 of which have been seeded. This could have the greatest impact on the industry, says Mr. Keough, by opening the door of livestock production on a large scale in new pasture areas. The number of milk bred in Newfoundland was tripled since 1955. Today 25 milk ranchers have 15,000 animals. "The quality of the fur production is excellent and it appears that production is economic," Mr. Keough says.

Mr. Keough, in releasing the first major list of agriculture statistics, gave these figures for 1955 production: 16,000,000 pounds of cabbage; 450,000 bushels of turnips; 2,450,000 dozen eggs; 1,200,000 gallons of milk; 2,000,000 pounds of beef; 1,000,000 pounds of lamb, and 500,000 pounds of pork.

Yank Planes Stir Protest

BERLIN (Reuters)—A second incident involving Russian fighters and an American plane flying above 10,000 feet in the Berlin air corridor has resulted in an exchange of protests between American and Russian officials here.

The latest incident—just a week after Russian fighters "buzzed" an American transport plane in the corridor—was revealed by a United States spokesman Tuesday.

He said the U.S. C-97 was joined by two Russian MiG jet fighters April 3 as it flew above 10,000 feet en route from West Berlin to Frankfurt, West Germany.

The spokesman added that the MiGs had flown dangerously close—to within 100 feet—of the unarmed C-97.

In Washington, the state department said the decision to fly the C-97 at 12,000 feet was made by the pilot because of a cloud cover. Press officer Lincoln White said the plane was on a visual flight plan, meaning the pilot had to maintain a position where he was sure of flying clear of other planes.

White also said the U.S. has again insisted that Soviet planes stop buzzing U.S. aircraft on flights to Berlin.

The Russians claim that Western powers for years have kept below 10,000 feet and thus have made such a ceiling a "kind of prescriptive law."

Stun Edict Irks Jews

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Jewish Congress says Jews would be unable to conform to precepts of their religion if animal slaughter regulations required a beast to be stunned before being slaughtered.

In a brief presented to the Commons agriculture committee Tuesday by Sydney M. Harris of Toronto, the congress said it agrees with others who support the idea that animals should be killed as painlessly as possible. The committee is studying proposals for new animal slaughter regulations.

"But one method that is frequently suggested is that the beast be stunned or rendered unconscious prior to slaughter."

"Our religious laws require that food animals must not be injured or hurt in any way before they are slaughtered and that they must be conscious, healthy and whole at the moment of slaughter."
