

Loss Of Romance Penalty For Women's Gain in Intellect

NEW YORK, (UP) — Today's woman is twice as brainy as her grandmother, but what she's gained in intellect, she's lost in romance, one authority says.

Dr. Jolande Jacobi, of the faculty of the Carl Jung Institute for Analytical Psychology, Zurich, Switzerland, says that modern woman does not hold man in awe as did the woman of two generations ago.

"Woman has solved her inferiority complex on the intellectual level," said Dr. Jacobi, who is lecturing on marriage at the New School for Social Research.

But the psychotherapist says that modern woman's equal status also has eliminated much of the fantasy and beauty from her life. She has become too much of a pal, and as a result, protection, gallantry, and courtship have gone out the window.

Dr. Jacobi says men aren't inclined to woo women when they are forced to compete with them for jobs or seats on the subway.

Liking Elephants Is Qualification For Hostess Job

MONTREAL (CP) — Attention girls: There may be an opening for you in far-away Kenya if you have a friendly feeling toward elephants and if you are handy with a sling-shot.

The qualifications were among those laid down in an advertisement placed in Kenya newspapers by the Treetops Hotel, famous jungle resort where the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh stopped while touring Africa.

The advertisement, sent here by a former Montrealer, set out these requirements for the hostess sought by the hotel:

"Qualifications—similar to those required of an air hostess including tact and personality. In addition, there must be a friendly feeling towards elephant, rhino, buffalo and other game; ability to climb a tree quickly if necessary; sufficient skill with a catapult to hit at 10 yards monkeys trying to enter treecrooks for tea; general knowledge of game; fluent Swahili."

The source of the Blue Nile in Egypt was discovered in 1770 by the Scotsman James Bruce.

SUNSHINE CAKE

1 1/2 cups sugar
7 eggs whites
1 1/2 teaspoons cream tartar
Flouring to taste
7 egg yolks
1 cup flour

Dampen sugar and boil until it strings. Add to egg whites, which have been beaten to a stiff froth. Beat 5 minutes, add cream of tartar, flavouring and beaten yolks; then flour sifted 3 times. Bake in ungreased funnel tin for 1 hour in moderate oven. When done turn over hot towel. Cut with fork.

How Can I!!!

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I remove burnt food from aluminum cooking vessels?
A. By placing dry over the fire. As soon as the food is charred it will loosen and should be removed immediately. Acids, such as tomato or lemon juice, will brighten aluminum.

Q. How can I obtain relief when always troubled with cold feet?
A. Relief is often obtained by cutting a piece of paper the shape of the sole of the shoes, and placing it in the stocking.

Wife Provides Lots Of Water (For Dishes)

GREENSBORO, NC. (AP) — Walter Adams, an insurance executive, believes he has the world's most considerate wife.

Addressing a Boy Scout council, he extolled her virtues, saying, "When I come home at night my easy chair is ready, my slippers are laid out and my pipe is on the table. And there's plenty of hot water."

Pausing, he added, "I never could wash dishes in cold water!"

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

A west painted in shades of pink and rose and coral, made a delightful background at sunset for the dark tips of the spruces and "vars" that these days modestly display their sturdy loveliness here and there along the height and depth of this valley. In the other seasons their grace often passes unnoticed. But now is their day, as darkly beautiful they take up the winter-watch singly or in a company, pretty against the white of the fields or outlined on the horizons, changing hues. Especially engaging we find them when as this evening the sunset colors burn and glow and linger in rosy embers until the night pours through her flood-gates the soft gray shadows of the twilight and the day is done.

Silent then were the fields, which in a neat pattern run up the opposite slope—still and deserted. But now the neighboring farmhouses, snug in their sheltering groves and hills, seem to move closer to each other, to be more friendly and inter-dependent than in other seasons. Plumed smokes brightened by the faultless brush of the afterglow rose in fresh volume from chimneys, betokening the near approach of the supper-hour. In mind we could picture the farmwives bustling about, busy in the preparation: moving shiny teakettles closer to the scented woodcoals; spreading the table, in a deft movement, with a pretty cloth; laying each setting precisely, maybe glad at heart that the solid, stolid everyday dishes of once—even though these had since become collectors'—prized items—had been succeeded by gay things, artistically decorated, colorful.

"Now, that plate," we smiled with a touch of apprehension to a visiting grandmother of last summer as we washed the supper ware, or would like you to drop it. It's as old as... well, they're quite rare now."

She giggled merrily. "It's good that you mentioned it, Ellen," she replied. "For I have an urge to let it slip! You see, we used that same make and design for everyday use at home in the long ago, perhaps the task of washing dishes had something to do with my sentiment, but how heartily I disliked them! I was always so glad when the Minister and his wife or other company came, which gave occasion to use the Sunday china, so delicate and pretty it was... and so easy to wash!"

And would not the farmwife of

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. Is it all right to dip the napkin into a glass of water, after eating, and wipe the mouth and fingers?

A. If no finger bowl has been provided, it is proper to hold your napkin in one hand and tip the glass enough to wet it. This is better than "dunking" the napkin in the glass.

Q. Is it necessary for a bride-elect to reply to notes expressing good wishes from her friends who have seen the engagement announcement in the paper?

A. It is not necessary for her to write notes, but she may telephone some of her friends and she most certainly should thank all those whom she meets.

Q. Even if the wedding is to be very small and informal, would it be all right for a bride to wear a white bridal veil?

A. Yes, provided it is not her second marriage.

For Tomorrow

THE early hours indicate a need for rechecking plans and decisions. Over-optimism and careless thinking could result in serious errors. If in doubt about your program seek competent advice and heed suggestions from impartial observers. Confine your purchases this day to those which are absolutely necessary.

For the Birthday

If tomorrow is your birthday, the year ahead promises a great deal in the way of expansion and attainment both in your personal and your professional life. During the next five months, you may have to stick more or less to routine schedules but, beginning in June, there is promise of unusual opportunities and the possibility of making some unusually fine contacts.

The aforementioned opportunities may involve your entrance into a brand new field of endeavor, the formation of a business or professional partnership or a revolutionary change of business methods that could prove highly profitable. Keep alert and capitalize on the advantages sure to come your way. During the summer months, while your attention should be riveted to business affairs, your personal goals may have to be postponed but, with the coming of fall, you should be able to organize your affairs so that proper balance can be restored. Generally speaking, 1954 should bring you an enormous increase in prestige and personal honor.

A child born on this day will be endowed with great integrity and sincerity but will have to guard against moodiness.

After Girl Makes Arrangements For Wedding, Her Beau Reneges

DEAR MISS DIX: Last September I became engaged to a man who was about to enter an officers school. Our wedding was to take place in two months, when he got his first furlough, and in the meanwhile I was to make all preparations.

Well, the preparations went along all right and, two weeks before the wedding date, I had a letter from him telling me to hold up all arrangements until he had a chance for a talk. When he came home he said he was afraid of marriage, and needed more time to think it over. He left and I haven't heard from him since. The situation was, of course, very embarrassing to me; my friends had given me many presents, and two showers. What is hardest for me, however, is the fact that I still love him and would take him back at once. The only explanation I can think of is that he had an unhappy love affair, sometime before he met me. Should I write him, or just wait?

ANSWER: From my vantage point, I'd say the young man just changed his mind for reasons best known to himself, and he no longer wants to marry you. Perhaps the other girl came back into the picture, or perhaps there is a new one. There is also the possibility that separation brought about a change of heart, or a new perspective simply made him decide you weren't the girl for him. Whether any one of these suppositions is the reason for his silence, is for you to decide.

The first step in readjustment, for a girl who has been disappointed in love, is to face the situation squarely and make up her mind to conquer it. The young man is no mere boy, subject to the whims of adolescence. At 25 he's surely well able to make up his own mind. Writing to him now would only be opening the wound wider. You'd be on constant watch for a reply, hoping for that which will not materialize. Since he appeared quite definite in his decisions to call everything off, you'd better proceed on that assumption. The time-honored cures for fractured hearts are prayer and new interests, but the first step is your own submission to circumstances. While there's always the possibility that your sweetheart will return, patient and ready for the altar, it would be well for you not to count on the happy ending.

DEAR MISS DIX: Last week I met a very nice boy at a dance and he was quite attentive to me. When we parted, he said he would phone

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

SITTING DOWN TO SURGERY

During World War I a young flying officer was admitted to our base hospital who had fallen about 20,000 feet and lost most of his lower jaw and many teeth. As Senior Medical Officer, I contacted two dental surgeons who made a good job of repairing the young officer's face. What surprised me was that they sat on high chairs to perform the operation.

In the British Lancet, Dr. G. Sacks states that the practice of surgery is dominated by the patient—his care, his comfort, and his survival. No one bothers too much to consider the care, comfort, or survival of the surgeon. Suggestions are made to lengthen the surgeon's days and to sweeten the atmosphere in operating theatres. Dr. Sacks states further that the greatest need is for the surgeon to be relaxed whilst operating which can be done better with the surgeon sitting down. The ordinary stool in the operating room does not suit the surgeon sitting down. The one used by Dr. Sacks has a powerful spring for the pedestal portion so that it accommodates itself somewhat to movement. The Cole-Rous position is adapted in the following manner for upper abdominal operations. With the patient lying on her back, a sandbag 18 inches long and about 6 inches wide is placed under the right side of the thorax so that the body of the patient is tilted to the left while leaving the pelvis flat on the table. The right arm is brought over so that it hangs over the left shoulder and the face is turned to the left. The patient lies close to the left of the table and the table is tilted slightly sideways. Operation on gall bladder or stomach from this sitting position is vastly simplified as the surgeon sits with his hands in the correct position to finish the operation.

"The surgical removal of the gall bladder (cholecystectomy) or the surgical removal of the stomach (gastrectomy) performed in this position become vastly simplified." In removal of the stomach, the duodenum (first part of the small intestine into which the stomach empties) comes forward admirably and the surgeon sits with his hands in the correct position to close his cut end. The most difficult case becomes easy. Scarcely ever are retractors (instruments to hold back tissues) called for in either operation.

When we think of extensive operations with the surgeon having to operate for several hours, it is gratifying to know that many difficult and extensive operations may be performed in the sitting-down position.

but he hasn't. I'll meet him again soon at the same place. Should I ignore him, or give him a chance to explain. FANNY

ANSWER: Don't ignore him, and don't expect him to explain. Apparently his promise to phone was a mere formality, and has already been forgotten by him. Be pleasant at the next meeting, and perhaps on a future occasion he'll make good his promise to call you.
