Rusticville Family Has Very Outstanding Record

The following article from the Company Magazine tells of the career of the LeClair brothers with the International Business Machines at Poughkeepsie, New York.

"We like it here".

This, in a nutshell, sums up why four LeClair brothers, Urban, Cyrus, Francis and Eric, found their way from Rusticville, Prince Edward Island, Canada, to IBM Poughkeepsie.

"It is only natural for a man to want his sons to follow in his footsteps, but in this case we brothers did it instead," says brother Urban, first to join the company and unofficial spokesman for the group.

Urban, better known as "Lee", started here March 1944 as an assistant cook. Six months later he entered the service and after three years in the Air Force, returned to his job at IBM. He is presently an assembler in the Proof Machine Base Units Assembly Department, and lives in Hyde Park.

Cyrus, an assembler in the Punch and Verifier Unit Assembly Department, was hired a few months after Lee in July 1942, and is very proud of his seven-year-old daughter, Deborah, who is a very good friend of Dick's. He is altogether a gentleman; and at first when we realized our attraction was deepening, we talked of my quitting — but I didn't.

I have been seeing Jay (I'll call him) two or three times a week, away from the office. We only wish we could have met 12 years ago and had these past years together. We have the same interests, talk the same language, just enjoy being together.

LOVERS REALIZE

Neither has discord at home; both are well adjusted to life, or were until this hit us; and have been faithful all our married life. We are active in church work and realize we have no right to this love. We know also that happiness never comes of hurting others—the one thing that has kept us from breaking up our homes.

We've even talked of waiting 10 years, until my children will be on their own and wouldn't be affected by divorce. Jay married about the same time I did, and has a lovely wife with whom I am well acquainted.

Journalist Tom Patterson Began Stratford Festival

The idea of holding a Canadian Shakespearean Festival in the small namesake of the English poet's birthplace was conceived by a Stratford-born journalist, Tom Patterson. As originally envisaged, the scheme called for the utilization of the local open-air bandstand, and a budget of about $30,000. Approaching the city council with his idea, Mr. Patterson found sympathetic ears and in January of 1952 was voted $125 to visit New York City in search of talent. Although he returned from this trip empty handed, the idea of a Shakespearean Festival had captured the imagination of many of the local citizens and in March, a committee was set up under the chairmanship of Dr. Harrison A. Showalter to investigate the scheme further.

TYRONE GUTHRIE

From the expert advice was felt that expert advice was required and the following month it extended an invitation to Tyrone Guthrie, former administrator of the Old Vic Theatre and noted British director, to visit and give his impressions of the plan. Dr. Guthrie arrived in July and spent two weeks investigating not only the suitability of Stratford as a site for such a project, but also the current state of Canadian theatre. At the end of this time he agreed to be associated with the venture on three conditions: that a star and experienced theatre personnel be employed, that a closed-in theatre (he suggested a tent) be constructed, and that a revolutionary "open stage" similar to that used in Shakespeare's day be built instead of the more conventional proscenium style. He estimated that to carry out such a plan successfully would require a budget of about $150,000. The committee accordingly raised its sights and, at Dr. Guthrie's suggestion, sent Tom Patterson on a "star shopping" tour to England.

ALEX GUINNESS

As a result of this trip, negotiations were successfully completed with Alex Guinness to appear as star, Tyrone Guthrie as director, Tania Moisewitsch as designer, and Cecil Clarke as production manager and assistant director. With the incredible dream rapidly becoming a reality, the committee made application to the Provincial Government for a charter and in October set up a non-profit organization to be known as the Stratford Shakespearean Festival Foundation of Canada with Harrison A. Showalter as president, and A.M. Bell as vice-president.

In December of 1952, Dr. Guthrie returned to Canada and held auditions in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and Stratford during which time he interviewed nearly four hundred actors and actresses. He also held further discussions with the Board of Directors of the Festival Foundation on plans for the summer, discussed choices of plays and helped in many other detailed arrangements.

CECIL CLARKE

With the arrival in Stratford of Cecil Clarke in January 1953, organization began on the many behind-the-scenes aspects of the theatre. Further negotiations were carried on with theatrical talent in England which resulted in the engaging of Irene Worth as leading actress, Douglas Campbell and Michael Bates as supporting leads, Jacqueline Cundall as head property maker, and Ray Duffen, theatrical cutter from the Stratford Memorial Theatre as head costumier.

Meanwhile the three and a half tons of canvas, forming the walls and roof of the theatre tent designed by the U.S. Tent and Awning Company, were under construction in Chicago, the stateroom concrete foundation of the theatre was being poured, and the diamond-shaped open stage was assembled in the Stratford city park on land donated by the Stratford Parks Board. While the theatre proper was not ready until the middle of June, rehearsals began on June 1st on a mock-up stage in the local Agricultural Building. Finally on July 10th the Canadian Stratford Festival opened its first five-week season with a stirring performance of Richard III starring Alec Guinness in the title role with a supporting Canadian company. This was followed the next evening with the second production of the two-play repertoire, All's Well That Ends Well, starring Irene Worth as Helena.

FESTIVAL GROWS

Public reaction to the swiftness, colourful productions was overwhelmingly enthusiastic. Spectators crowded into the theatre tent night after night for an unprecedented total attendance of 80 percent of capacity. Visitors came from points as far away as Florida and Texas in such numbers that the original five-week schedule had to be extended to six. Since that first season, the Festival has grown in scope to include music, film and fine art attraction in addition to the dramatic productions which form its core. The original tent has been replaced by a permanent building which houses the workshop and offices as well as the stage and auditorium. Originally administered by a Board of Governors and a small summer staff, the Festival now employs a permanent staff of about twenty-five who carry on the day-to-day business under the direction of the General Manager and the Board.

MARY HAWORTH

Book On This Subject Will Be Of Help To You

Dear Mary Haworth: For the first time in my life I am facing a situation that I can't cope with. The problem is my fault; I make no excuse for it.

I have been married for almost 12 years to a wonderful man and have two fine children. Everyone thinks us the perfect family. Dick is a good husband, devoted to me; very handsome; a professional success, loved and admired by all.

As my children are in school I returned to a job in the business world; and over a period of months, have let myself fall in love with an office associate, who is a very good friend of Dick's. He is altogether a gentleman; and at first when we realized our attraction was deepening, we talked of my quitting — but I didn't.

I have been seeing Jay (I'll call him) two or three times a week, away from the office. We only wish we could have met 12 years ago and had these past years together. We have the same interests, talk the same language, just enjoy being together.

LOVERS REALIZE

Neither has discord at home; both are well adjusted to life, or were until this hit us; and have been faithful all our married life. We are active in church work and realize we have no right to this love. We know also that happiness never comes of hurting others—the one thing that has kept us from breaking up our homes.

We've even talked of waiting 10 years, until my children will be on their own and wouldn't be affected by divorce. Jay married about the same time I did, and has a lovely wife with whom I am well acquainted.

will help us, and perhaps others in a similar case. W.P.

MAN STYMIES HOPES

Dear W.P.: Reading between the lines, the picture I get is that this attraction became a problem for you, when you began to realize that Jay was disposed to go just so far and no farther, astray.

It seems you led him step by step into an extramarital intrigue; and had supposed that the reins were in your hands; that it would be your prerogative to decide whether to break with the past, and start anew with Jay, or stay married to Dick.

However, I gather that Jay, though smitten with you—captivated perhaps by your manifest you for him—is still deeply attached to his lovely wife, maybe indelibly in love with her. So he isn't breaking away from her; and very gently, by indirection, is letting you know that.

Such is the inner significance of those repetitive, unfinished, forlorn and frustrating talks about having no right to this love; no good coming of hurting others, etc.

It is a pretty safe bet that if Jay were insistent on paying any price that had to be paid, to translate this romance into second marriage as fast as could be arranged, you would be telling yourself a different story. You would be finding arguments in favor of displacing the old with the new; and consoling yourself that the other parties affected would adjust somehow.

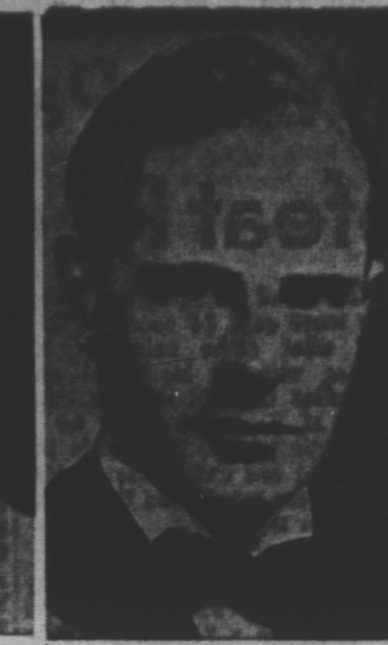

As matters stand, you need help in trying to come to terms, philosophically, with a measure of frustration that events have brought on you; that you haven't honestly elected, with brave unselfishness.

Well, what can I say? Perhaps the full answer to your need will be found in Dom Aelred Walkin's beautiful little book The Enemies of Love (P. J. Kennedy and Sons). In the marriage you have already you possess the makings of heart's content, provided you learn the meaning of love in the larger sense. M.H.

MORE LIBERAL POLICY

CAIRO, Egypt (Reuters)—President Nasser has moved toward a more liberal policy in national elections by calling a halt to the government's screening of candidates. Nasser Sunday night decreed an end to the system of screening all persons seeking political office as the first of a series of steps leading to formation of a new national assembly.

WALPEQUE W.M.S.

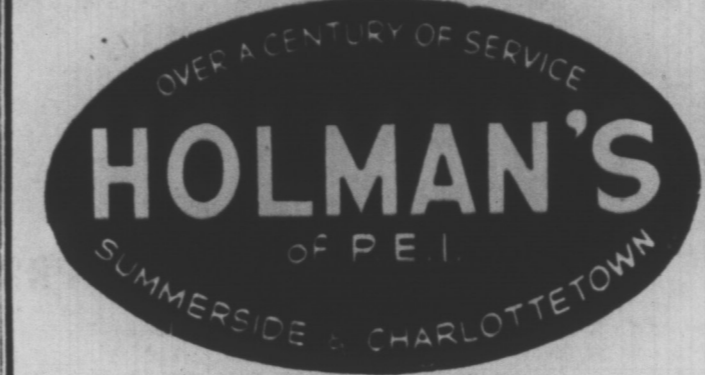

The Thank Offering service of the W.M.S. was held in Keir Memorial Presbyterian Church, Malpeque on June 7th. Rev. E.H. Bean, B.A. Bth., B.D., was in charge of the service choosing as his text Isaiah 45-22, and delivering a most inspiring address on the work of the missionaries in the various fields. He stressed the great amount of work remaining to be done, to bring the message to the many heathen peoples who have not yet had the opportunity of seeing the light.

The male quartet of Kensington and Freetown greatly assisted with the musical part of the service, rendering most beautifully the "Only a Contrite Heart."

The members of this quartet are Messrs Howard Cairns, Fred Semple, Charles Beatrix and Keith Thompson.
