

What is Scott's Emulsion?

It is the best cod-liver oil, partly digested, and combined with the hypophosphites and glycerine. What will it do? It will make the poor blood of the anæmic rich and red.

It will give nervous energy to the overworked brain and nerves. It will add flesh to the thin form of a child, wasted from fat-starvation.

It is everywhere acknowledged as The Standard of the World.

POULTRY FATTENING

A Description of Cramming Carried on in England.

A short time ago the Master (Mr. Gow), and several members of the Poultryers' Company, and some other friends, went to Baynards, Surrey, to visit the poultry rearing and fattening establishments which Mr. Chas. E. Brooke, Past-Master of the Company in question has started, and is working with such success. Mr Brooke and his liveried company have done a great deal during the last few years with a view of developing the poultry industry in the kingdom, and evidence of their efforts is very apparent at the Table Poultry Exhibition now annually held in connection with the Smithfield Fat Stock Show at Islington. Similar evidence is apparent at other shows, both in London and in the provinces.

The company referred to are assisted by Sir Walter Gilbey and a few other public spirited gentlemen, who consider—and very rightly—that it is a disgrace that we should not make some real and tangible effort to produce what we now import in the way of poultry, eggs and the like.

Mr Brooke, however, not content with the mere advocacy of a matter of this sort, has himself gone into the practical part of the business, by, as we have suggested, rearing and fattening poultry for the market. On Tuesday he showed us how it was all done and the general impression left upon the minds of the visitors was that if one gentleman can start, in a country district, what is tantamount to a new industry, and can carry it on with success, others ought to do the same. Mr. Brooke is, as a matter of fact, highly successful in his work. He has two or three farms at which birds are reared. Around the manor at Baynards, where Mr Brooke resides, are large numbers of poultry being fattened and sent off weekly or daily to the metropolitan market.

We put a few questions for the attendants, and the information we elicited was as follows:—The birds, when put up for fattening, are about three months old. The food used is maize meal, barley meal, oatmeal, wheatmeal, millet meal, and skim-milk mixed. Mr. Brooke buys these meals tons at a time, and thus, no doubt, gets them cheaper than if purchasing smaller quantities.

After the food is mixed, it is allowed to stand for some hours, in order that the fermentation set up may subside. The birds are fattened for from three weeks to a month. The fattening process is performed by using Hearson's Cramming machines. The birds before killing are fasted twenty-four hours. They are killed by breaking their vertebra, and not by sticking a knife into the brain, or by some other processes which are recommended by poultry-keepers. They are all plucked immediately after they are killed, and the few fine hairs which may be about the body after plucking are taken off by singeing. The feathers realize about 1 1/2 d. per pound, and are used chiefly for bedding. After the birds have been plucked, they are placed on long wood shelves, the necks hanging downwards, and the legs being tied under the body. The backs are uppermost and the birds are placed side by side rather closely. On top of each row, a long board is placed horizontally. This is weighted with weights, the object being to press the birds into one shape, and thus give a nicer appearance than would otherwise be possible. The breasts of the birds are apparently not broken unless any of them prove to be awry. In cramming, two persons are employed in performing the operation. One is a youth, who takes, one at a time, the birds from the long rows of pens in the cramming room, and hands the same to the foreman of the department, or other responsible employe, who is standing at the cramming machine, ready to cram the bird. The spout of this machine, which is covered with leather, is forced down the birds' mouth and neck some six or eight inches. When there, the operator, by pressing the treadle of the cramming machine with his foot, forces about a handful of the mixed meal referred to into the crop. Care has to be taken that too much is not forced therein, or the crop may be burst. The cramming operations are performed twice daily and it is astonishing with what rapidity a bird is taken from its pen, crammed and put back again. Mr. Brooke has something like 4,000 birds constantly on hand for fattening, and, although he used to rear the bulk of his poultry himself, he has got his system into such good working order, that the rural people for miles around have started keeping poultry, and when the birds have arrived at a suitable age, they sell them to Mr. Brooke, who fattens them for the London market. Naturally, therefore, there is always a great preponderance of cross-breeds, but we may remark that the owner of Baynards has a good proportion of pure-bred Dorking, Indian Game, Langshans, and Orpingtons.—The English "Rural World."
