Mr. Watterworth stated that the market was quite brisk, and that most of last year's customers were waiting the arrival of this year's carload, completely satisfied with the balsam-fir trees which he had brought last year. With an ever-growing U.S.A. market for Christmas trees, the opening up of a new enterprise is under way, and Mr. Watterworth has led the way to the establishment of this market which will surely develop all the more in future years.

Home Destroyed By Fire In East Baltic

Late Saturday night the home of Mr. Henry Whalen, East Baltic, was completely destroyed by fire, which began from an overheated kitchen stove. In attempting to extinguish the flames young Thomas Whalen, nephew of Mr. Whalen, was burned about the hands and arms, and was removed to Souris Hospital for treatment. At the time of the fire, Mr. Whalen was absent in Souris, and the young nephew arrived home and proceeded to light the fire in the kitchen stove. It is supposed that the stove exploded, and before long the two story frame house was a mass of flames. A large crowd immediately gathered, but the fire had progressed to such a stage in so short a time that they were unable to fight it, and were able to save only a small quantity of furniture. Over 1000 bushels of potatoes in the cellar were a complete loss. It is understood that the loss was not covered by insurance.

BATTLE OF THE SKID

New British Tyre Research Centre

It would be difficult to imagine the development of the motor vehicle as we know it without John Boyd Dunlop's invention of the pneumatic tyre. Much the same can be said about aircraft. Designers of car engines and suspensions quickly come to the point where the degree of adhesion between the tyre and the road is a most important factor. Aircraft manufacturers, similarly, have to throw the ball to the rubber experts when it comes to getting their several tons of inventive genius safely down on the tarmac again. As performance in both fields has risen steeply since the war, it is a good thing that most rubber manufacturers are ready to spend considerable sums of money on research projects.

SKILL AND NERVE

Generally with the idea of replacing opinion with carefully measured facts, the world-wide Dunlop organisation has opened at Fort Dunlop, England, a new research plant which they claim is without peer anywhere. On the automobile side there is still a place for the test driver and the test car, since the behaviours of tyre and vehicle are inseparable. The final check is still the man with nerve enough to drive a standard saloon car at speed on to a skid rink, lock the wheels and put his helm hard over at the same time. The man provides the nerve and the fine judgement to make this test possible; but the conclusions are the concern of instruments which record quite accurately just what happens to the tyres, the suspension and the road during the process. The locked wheel test is used not because anyone thinks it is the quickest way of stopping a car at speed but because it limits the factors involved. Vehicle characteristics are still important but less so than in any other test.

Ultra-sonic waves are used to find minute flaws between the layers which make up a tyre.

A standard tyre is subjected to high speed and hideous distortion.

An X-ray test on a tyre, the operator standing behind a protective screen.

Dirty flies as a test car is driven on to the skid track. It is a tarred road well sprayed with water.
