

Yachts Adrift On Raft Rescued By Fishermen

O'LEARY — Two St. Eleanor's youths had a narrow escape from drowning Tuesday when a home made raft carried them out to sea from their camping site in the Cape Wolf area.

Sterling Muiridge, 18, and Pat Cousin, 15, clad only in bathing suits, built the raft in the afternoon and poled it out from the shore and were unable to return when winds increased.

They drifted aimlessly for several hours before being sighted off Mingineagh by Gerald Murphy who was reported to be a fisherman out from that port on Tuesday.

Mr. Murphy was ready to return home and decided to take a look around with his binoculars.

Accused of holding up the bill for spokesmen for the other two position parties.

Harold Winch (NDP—Vancouver East) and Gilles Gregoire (SC—Lapointe) said the Conservatives have no reason to object to the addition of six members unless the five Conservative appointments had been made on a partisan basis.

"Let's get ahead," Mr. Winch shouted at the Conservative benches.

Mr. Maclean said that Parliament or the Atlantic provinces should not accept Mr. Pickersgill's description of strengthening the board "with unquestioning blind faith."

Parliament also should be careful about handing over $100,000 to a board to spend without further parliamentary faith.

He urged that the board be controlled in such things as letting of contracts in the same way an government department is governed by the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. Flemming, a former New Brunswick premier, said the five members appointed by the Conservatives should be assured of completing their normal terms, and not put in an inferior position to the proposed six new members.

"Only in that way will the government avoid being accused of trying to dilute the present membership of the board," he said.

"What is your great anxiety about this?" asked John E. Lloyd (L—Halifax). "We know who the present members of the board are, and what their capabilities are, but we don't know who the new members will be. What are you trying to protect?"

"I'm trying to see the decent thing is carried out. That seems to be unknown on the other side of the House."

Mr. Flemming noted that Mr. Pickersgill had quoted the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, headed by Walter Gordon, now Atlantic minister, in support of the new look being given to the board by the Liberal government.

He said he marvelled at Mr. Pickersgill's temerity in doing so, since the commission's findings had been shown unacceptably to the Atlantic provinces in the general election of 1967, 1968 and 1962 won by the Conservatives.

It was the Gordon report, Mr. Flemming said, which suggested that residents of the Atlantic provinces be assisted by the federal treasury to move out of the Atlantic region to other parts of Canada.

"The previous (Conservative) government wanted to help the Maritimers to stay in the Maritimes," Mr. Flemming added.

Mr. Pickersgill said the Conservative government had increased the amounts voted by Parliament through the labor department to help workers relocate, and had done more than any previous government to pay Maritimers to leave the area.

"That was only a small amount of money compared to the funds the previous government voted to build up the Atlantic province economy," Mr. Flemming said.

PROPOSES NEW MEMBER

Thomas M. Bell (PC—Saint John-Albert) said one of the new board members should be K. C. Irving, the Saint John industrialist, or a representative of the oil interests.

He said Mr. Irving has developed numerous industries in the Atlantic provinces, and the board would benefit from his knowledge and experience.

Former finance minister Nowlan said it is unfortunate that any sum of money is mentioned in the bill.

There was a real danger that the government would adopt a negative attitude every time ambitious projects were proposed to develop the Atlantic region. The government could say, "you've got your board and you're talking about it. What more do you want?"

Former defence minister Churchill denied that the Conservatives are obstructing the bill. The Liberals were the "great masters of obstruction" in the Commons.

"This bill is not being held up, it is being given very careful consideration," he said.

Stage Extension Creates Atmosphere Of Nearness

The 14-foot extension to the stage at Queen Charlotte High School auditorium, completed yesterday for the Shaw Festival, will create the impression that the stage and audience are one unit.

The addition was constructed by the MacDonald-Rowe Woodworking Company and was financed by the City of Charlottetown.

Lionel Dixon, artistic director, said that one basic set will be used for all three plays, "Candida," "You Never Can Tell," and "Arms and the Man." There will be very little scene shifting.

But lighting, which, along with sound, is in the capable hands of Mike Duffy, will play a prominent part in the presentation of the plays. The system of stage lighting in this auditorium can be used most effectively to create different moods in a play and give an illusion of depth.

Asked if having the audience seated around the play would create difficulties in projection for the actors, Mr. Dixon agreed that this would be the case. They will have to be conscious at all times that the audience is all around them, he said.

FORMAL OPENING

Mr. Dixon was most enthusiastic about the plans for the opening performance of "Candida" this Saturday night. He referred to by some as "the social event of the season," will have dignitaries attending.

Mr. Dixon said the acceptance of invitations to attend the premiere has been very good. He has received word that Watson McNaught, solicitor-general, will be coming from Ontario to attend the performance.

Old Time Fiddlers Championship Set

Word has been received here that the 13th annual Canadian Open Championship Old Time Fiddlers contest will be staged in the arena at Shelburne, Ontario, Aug. 2 and 3.

Sponsored by the Rotary Club of Shelburne the contest is run for the purpose of aiding the Crippled Children's Society and is designed in advance of the time fiddling in Canada.

There is practically no bars on who can enter the contest, which are in two sections, the first in which only accepted old time music may be played and the other devoted to novelty numbers.

Persons eligible may be any age, race, creed, color, sex, domicile or professional status, and the deadline for entries is 6 p.m. Aug. 2.

manance. Most provincial cabinet ministers, Mayor Wilhen Gaudet, and other officials will be there.

Keith Morrow, a CBC official and a governor of the Stratford, Ontario, Shakespearean theatre, and Lloyd McLintic from CBC Halifax's "Gazette" are also among those travelling to Charlottetown for the event.

At the opening night, anyone interested in helping support the Shaw Festival in 1964 will have the opportunity to become a "Friend of the Festival" by contributing five dollars, Mr. Dixon said.

Following the performance will be a reception, the location to be announced later.

Mr. Dixon strongly urged that people reserve tickets for performances of the George Bernard Shaw plays in advance. "The reservations can be changed practically up to curtain time," he said.

He said the festival has already sold block bookings to a variety of Women's Institute groups and other organizations. These are offered at reduced rates, he said, and various other groups are making up theatre parties to take advantage of the festival.

The Shaw Festival is being highly publicized all over the province. Mr. Dixon said nearly 2,000 posters had been distributed throughout the province, and that the festival is publicizing it in other provinces and the United States through their promotional services.

Tuesday night members of the cast posted nearly 30 signs pointing the way to the festival throughout Charlottetown. A large sign reading "Charlottetown Shaw Festival" will be erected at Queen Charlotte auditorium itself.

Helping to further publicize the festival, the company will put in the office copies of the Ladies' Literary of Saint Dunstan's Basilica. The box office, located in the Ceyd Shop on Gratton Street is being run by the IODE.

Mr. Dixon said that a few tickets are left for "Candida" on Saturday night, but that sales have been rapid and it is expected that the auditorium, which seats 300, will be filled when the curtain rises at 8:30 p.m. Aug. 2.
