According to a once-popular song stars fell on Alabama one night, but yesterday snow fell on Prince Edward Island for the first time this season. The fall was very light and was not even general. Children, on waking yesterday, were delighted with the display of whiteness and promptly started to throw snowballs if they could find enough material. However, nearby areas had none of the fall. Since the middle of June the Province, and this city in particular, has been singularly free of moisture in the daytime. The majority of the rain has been at night for the past four months.

Miss Frances Johnston, Director of the Art Centre here, returned to the Province on the weekend after attending the past month in Brooklyn, N. Y., conducted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. From the moment the curtains opened on "Up She Goes" at the Parkdale Hall last evening it was obvious that the community had a definite "hit" on its hands. A rollicking, carefree production, with entertainment as its sole purpose, "Up She Goes" kept the large audience wondering what was going to happen next from the moment the curtain went up. Ranging from burlesque to a beautiful ballet number, it is a show which will be talked about for some time to come.
