Vast Changes Occurring In World Economically

By FORBES RUHE
Canadian Press Business Editor
The old saying that "you can't see the woods for the trees" is pertinent to what is happening to the world economically.
The trees consist of such things as the European Common Market, President Kennedy's tariff-cutting proposals, Soviet competition and our own wrangling with our trade problems.
Such things are big trees indeed, and of dramatic stature, but they are part of a developing industrial and trading world of such vast possibilities as to be sometimes frightening.
Britain was the home of the industrial revolution and Europe long the centre of the world, but in more recent years we became accustomed to thinking in terms of one industrial colossus, the United States. To North Americans this was a fairly snug and comprehensible situation.
Now we see at least three industrial colossi, with more to come. We see the United States, Western Europe and the Soviet bloc, not to mention Japan in other words, the industrial power which until recently we associated with the United States now is encircling the world.
ISOLATION DIFFICULT
The colossi may at times appear to be separate and even exclusive worlds in themselves but their intermingling seems inevitable. An Atlantic community of North America and Western Europe, a tremendous concept, is no longer regarded as visionary, and, barring war, it will be increasingly difficult for the western and Soviet blocs to live in isolation from one another.
At this point the future is obscured by international political considerations but, whatever these may be, they do not deny the fact that the world is becoming an industrial colossus from Pacific and back to Pacific again.
One of the "trees" at which we might take a closer look is the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the body which, last September, replaced the former Organization for European Economic Co-operation. Canada and the United States are members of the new body, whereas they were only associate members of OEEC.
As the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce comments in its January commercial letter, public attention has been somewhat diverted from OEEC by the emphasis being given to the Common Market.
The new organization, however, may well develop as a long-lasting forum for discussion and a means towards the co-operation and development which its name implies.
OEEC HAS VALUE
The bank letter, commenting upon President Kennedy's emphasis upon the necessity of the United States having access to European markets, says:
"Taking into account our relatively greater degree of dependence on foreign trade, it is clearly even more important for Canada to do everything within its power to ensure the maintenance and expansion of export markets in Europe.

"The OEEC may develop into a valuable association where we shall have access on a regular basis to the economic policy-makers of Europe, and where the economic co-ordination and co-operation embodied in the Marshall plan and the OEEC may be continued on the very different terms and in the very different circumstances of the 1960s."

9 Freedomites Sent To Prison
NELSON, B.C. (CP) — Sentences of up to 12 years were handed out Saturday to nine Sons of Freedom Doukhobors charged in connection with outrages in British Columbia's Kootenay district over the last two years.
Mr. Justice Norman Whittaker, sentencing men who had been found guilty in a special assize court that started earlier this month, said innocent persons who had no connection with the radical sect suffered as a result of their actions.
"In the past... Leniency has been shown to those convicted in the hope that it can be shown to you and your people that Canada is a friendly country, but to no avail.
"The time has come that an attempt must be made to protect the public. Every person who acts as a criminal must be treated as a criminal."
The sentencing caught the Freedomite community by surprise. There were no members in the court, other than the accused, when the sentences were read.

The Midday:
North East South West
1 ♠ Pass 1 ♠ Pass
2 ♠ Pass 3 NT
Opening lead — seven of spades.
Some hands have built in traps to catch the unwary declarer. Here is one it would be easy to fall into.
West led a spade. Declarer ducked two rounds and took the third one with the ace. On the spades he discarded two hearts from dummy.

He then cashed the queen of clubs and led a club to the ace, West showing out. Declarer could not afford to establish the clubs by giving up a trick in the suit, because the defense would then cash two more spades to defeat him a trick.
So he led a low diamond to the ace and another one back to the queen on which East dropped the jack. But when he then cashed the king of clubs and continued with the ten of diamonds, he was at the end of his resources.
He could let the ten hold the trick, or he could overtake it with the king, but in either case it would be his last diamond trick. West had kept his diamonds during the early play and the apparently innocuous nine proved to be a stumbling block for declarer. So South went down one.
When the play is examined, it is seen that South would have made the contract if he had led diamonds before clubs. This would have permitted him to score four diamond tricks, three clubs, and the two other aces.
It does seem unnatural for South to play diamonds ahead of clubs, but the advantage becomes clear if declarer makes proper allowance for the possibility of a 4-1 or 5-0 club break.
By playing diamonds first, declarer covers those cases where the singleton or doubleton jack of diamonds. This permits him to cash four diamond tricks before attacking clubs.
There is no advantage to leading clubs first, because that suit can take care of itself later if it is divided 3-2. There is an advantage to playing diamonds first, because the chances of making the contract are materially increased if it turns out that the clubs are unfavorably divided.
